OH BOY - OH BOY - OH BOY!!!!

Does this mean that we will get to hear those great recorded audio tapes of Lloyd, Woger and Mularkie Makkie in the HOT TUB together on GREEK NIGHT FRIDAY NIGHTS ????

You know! The one where you three and Bertha Bazooms and Sheena Silky (two 300 pould black wimmen who used to hang out at Brother Stair's farm)
all get together and perform acts of PRE-VERSION on each other? I don't

Once again, Woger telephones the Northern Regional Jail and asks,
"Have I ever been in your jail?" You'd think he would have figured it out the last time he called the NRJ and asked the same question.

DeLorian claims that somebody threw a scare into you last week, Woger.

Well, it may be a good point but I listened to both fone and CW as a Swan gear mostly drifted. It gave rise to some Cincinnati-area hams telling ops with drifting gear that they were "swanning". Most other gear had pretty good frequency stability. Back in those heady days, I had a Hallicrafters HT-32B which was stable, a Hammarlund HX-50 which was stable and a National NCX-5 which was very stable. The NCX-5 and HX-50 used sweep tubes in their output stages and the signals they transmitted were as clean as anything else on the air.

Absolutely, but my point is that there were sweep tube rigs with stability and clean signals. Remember the Drake TR-3, TR-4 and T-4 series? Sweep tubes all and very clean.

Even some of the better rigs of the eighties and nineties had that problem. The TS-930, 940 and 950 and the IC-751 put out plenty of phase noise. The Yaesu FT-1000MP (and all Mark-anything versions) put out key clix like nobody's business.

The FCC didn't consider the License Manual to be a "cheat". To do so, their own study guide would have been a "cheat".

I remember the AMECO books. I've glanced through them but never used 'em.

But a very large flap ensued over Bash.

Why sure, Leonard. Your pal, Col. Mark Morgan has now confessed to being a geophysicist. From some of his message headers, he is missing his id.

There aren't many of your posts in which you don't tell some outright falsehood. Both CNN and Fox News carried accounts of cellular phone service being disrupted. I'll bet some of those radio hams end up handling communication in the aftermath of the earthquake. Texas is west of the Mississippi. Do you think hams will be a part of the action in the wake of the flooding there?

I served in the military only four years, Len. I've posted nothing here in documenting my active duty service. I've not, nor would I ever make any such documentation available to you in an e-mail. Look what kind of things you've written about my active duty military service. Go figure!

You haven't attended catechism studies and haven't been confirmed. You don't pledge, you don't tithe. You may not partake. You're still an unbaptized heathen in the world of amateur radio.

One way to promote a mode is to give it significant band space.

The difference is that only Morse Code requires skills that the average

They were a few out of hundreds of thousands.

And yes, they all passed the Morse Code test - supposedly, anyhow. But they also passed one or more written tests which included questions on acceptable on-air behavior. Why don't the written tests get the blame?

Look at the recent case of Jack Gerritsen, ex-KG6IRO. What possible reason is there for his behavior?

The rigs that gave us headaches were only a few years old.

Are those really customer demands, or are they driven by the

It was the other way around. Bash did his thing in the early 1970s. The VE system came to be in the early 1980s. The VE system put Bash out of business because the question pools became public then.

New Hams just don't want to modernize, they're lazy and don't want to have to learn anything. I'm a 20 wpm Extra and the code requirement didn't stop me from modernizing beyond a microphone and CW. So don't believe anyone that says CW is killing ham radio. They're just sick, lame or Lazy.

If CW has been replaced by other technologies, why aren't more amateurs doing the modernized modes? It's because they don't want too. Ham radio has been dumbed down and we can't even force hams to use them to be proficient communicators.

CW isn't preventing the modernization of ham radio, Laziness is.

I'm motivating them. And when I catch them on the air, they have an enjoyable and educational contact.

When they find out CW, RTTY, packet, PSK, SSTV, are fun, they have just stepped in to a much larger ham radio, than one with just a ham talking on a microphone.

| Common name: Woodland Troll |
| Scientific name: Trollus Useneticus |

##################################################################
#
PHYSICAL CHARACTERISTICS: #
The common woodland troll (Trollus Useneticus) is an # # approximately 1.7m long nocturnal furry creature that # # has been found to exist in nearly every climate and # # latitude. Predominant features include: a very pale # # complexion, a large bony ridge above the eyes, a dense #
cranium, dragging knuckles, and a pungent odor. #
##################################################################

##################################################################
HABITAT: #
#
Most trolls spend the daylight hours under a large rock #
sleeping. Unfortunately, the natural habitat of the # # troll has been encroached by development (as is all too # # common these days). The modern troll has to make due # # with a slimy, moss covered rock. Often, trolls are # # forced to endure poor sanitation and filthy living # # conditions. Combined with the general lack of hygiene #
among trolls, this results in a very unpleasant odor. #
##################################################################

##################################################################
#
ACTIVITIES AND DIET: #
During their active period at night, the common troll #
engages in numerous activities, though the most # # important of these is foraging for food. The one # # characteristic that ties all different troll species #
and sub-species together is their diet. Trolls #
invariably survive off of a combination of cheetos, #
arguments, and annoying others. A typical troll #
requires approximately 10 arguments and flames per day #
just to stay alive. With the increasing use of # # killfiles and just regular ignoring of trolls, it has # # become more and more difficult for trolls to eke out a # # basic sustenance. #
##################################################################

##################################################################
#
KNOWN PREDATORS: #
Unfortunately, trolls have many predators. Most common #

among them are the helpful researcher, the informative #
poster, the cool headed responder, and the kill-filer. #
The cool header responder is technically not a troll #
predator however. Trolls are typically unfazed by # # logical counter arguments and cool headed reason. #
However, even though their posts do not deliver the # # same level of sustenance that a "flamer" or an "annoyed #
poster" may provide, they still provide a valuable #
source of dietary fiber for the troll. #
The most dangerous predators for the trolls are the # # helpful researcher, the informative poster, and the # # kill-filer. The common troll is highly allergic to # # fact, real data, and research. Upon skin contact with # # actual hard evidence and real data, the troll will # # experience intense itching and burning at the site of # # contact, followed by lesions and blisters. Eventually, # # this results in loss of skin near the area of contact, #
and usually to loss of a limb (in the example of # # contact near the arm or leg). Contact with facts and # # data near the facial area usually results in a slow #
painful death. Contact with extremely high doses of # # fact and hard data can cause temporary loss of # # consciousness and even permanent brain damage for the #
The kill-filer poses a much more insidious threat to # # the troll. Not posing a direct threat to the troll per # # se, the kill-filer simply deprives the troll of yet #
another source of nourishment. Some trolls have # # developed counter measures to thwart the kill-filers, #
usually this takes the form of a type of camoflage. #
#
The trolls' predators have reaped a terrible slaughter #
over the years, resulting in the death of great hordes #
of trolls. Trolls continue to breed rapidly though and # # their population is stable. However, it is unknown how # # long this situation can persist. Eventually, natural # # predators and poachers may result in lower numbers of # # trolls. Already we are seeing lower diversity among # # the different troll species. That is why this troll # # habitat refuge exists, to ensure the preservation of # # the troll for not only our future, but the future of # # our children. #

I'm sure a lot of hams migrated from citizens band, but up until about the last 16 years, they had to pass a real ham test to get in. Not dumbed down tests like we have today.

I made a lot of contacts on CW. I knew it was what I had to do to be a valuable asset to the service and I had a lot of fun communicating with other CW ops around the world. I was always surprised at how good the Russians were at CW. Doing CW helped me get get my skills up and I quickly passed my 20 wpm Extra. (the real Extra)

Now I try to help other hams and potential hams on radio and on usenet, but the usenet hams are so lazy they don't want to learn anything. They want licensing to be dumbed down some more.

Markie, if you cared for RRAP, you would ignore the teases, and not re-post what you're being teased about. Just ignore it, and stop acting like a retard. They tease you because you act retarded. Just learn CW and ignore the teases.

Yes you're right, unless you're trying to pass a message through someone that doesn't know how to speak english.

CW is a wonderful thing. Real communicators know CW and know how to use it.

Comments like the dumbed down item and the CB item will NOT motivate them.
To motivate them, simply say "Great, how can I help you explore all the aspects of ham radio".

> When they find out CW, RTTY, packet, PSK, SSTV, are fun, they have just

That is a much better approach so long as you don't go on and on about "dumbed down" licenses. The people taking the test have no control over the level of tests required. Simply show them the wonders of ham radio without comment on your personal opinions about dumbing down, CB, etc.

Yer missing the point.

Somebody at FCC reads 'em. That's all.

My guess is that the FCC doesn't even start reading the comments until after the comments close. Then they sort them by commenter, because some folks send multiple copies and there's no point reading the same thing more than once.

Then, I think, somebody goes through them weeding out the obvious cranks and fakes, as well as the dupes. Also, they probably pile up the simple "rubber stamp" ones ("I agree with ARRl/NCI/NCVEC").

What's left are the ones that need a bit of serious reading. Much smaller pile. You think Len's stuff makes it to that pile?

Today's FCC isn't the FCC of 20-30-40 years ago.

Code test is a completely different issue.

I used to think the code test thing was a slam dunk. Maybe it still is.
But the fact that FCC has taken so long so far makes me wonder. For all we know, they could keep it just because. Or they could do what Canada did. Or something else.

Roger that! The whole thing may have been a bit of a mind-game. ARRL gripes, so they put out a messy R&O that makes ARRL look bad.

I was asking why FCC treats them as two separate bands in Part 97, that's all.

Who is "the red-hatted monkey?"

Who is "the old organ-grinder?"

Who is "Jimmie Noserve?"

Who is "the Waffen SS guy?"

Have CNN or Fox News carried acounts of hams "up handling

How about ABC, CBS, or NBC? Any major newspapers?

The Hawaii 6.7-Richter earthquake is OVER, senior. No loss of life. Property damage, some. Utility damage, some. The Governor of Hawaii has been quoted (several

Is amateur radio about business? Sorry, it can't be.
FCC defines USA amateur radio as being done WITHOUT

That doesn't sound like any "business" in the normal sense.

You GOT the "example."

>incorrect.

You copied off the Moore School website PR material.
In itself that material is either incomplete or erroneous...such as the extravagant claim that
"ENIAC changed the world."

The FACT is that tomorrow, Thursday, 19 October, marks
the 33rd anniversary of a federal court decision on who had the first electronic computer. The judge's decision was that Iowa State University had it, the Atanasoff-Berry Computer (familiarly called "ABC").

Not only that, court transcripts indicate that John Mauchly had already seen the "ABC" but talked to both Atanasoff and Berry in detail on that "ABC." Further, Mauchly and Atanasoff exchanged mail following Mauchly's trip to Iowa to see the "ABC."

If you wish to see more and in detail on the REAL
"first electronic computer," just go to:

http://www.iastate.edu

And follow the links. There's many pages of information on the "ABC" plus that famous trial about "the ENIAC patents." Sperry-Rand (who had purchased the rights to the ENIAC patents) LOST that trial. TS for Sperry-Rand.
Not only that, the judge chided Mauchly in his decision paper, stating that Mauchly had taken a priori knowledge from the "ABC" and tried to pass it off as "his" for the ENIAC.

>As for the ABC, it was not completely electronic.

Really?!? WTF are you talking about? Look at the Iowa State "ABC" pages. Nice illustrations of it.

>More importantly, the original was never completed.

"Never completed?!?" WTF are you talking about? It was "completed" in the 1939 to 1942 period. As far as a federal court is concerned it was most definitely COMPLETED, completed well enough for the judge to declare it, the "ABC", was the FIRST electronic computer. [TRY to get used to that, Jimmie, I know it is damn difficult for you but for 33 years the "first" electronic computer title has gone to the Atanasoff-Berry Computer of 1939]

NOT "fully operational" by Moore School or the short-lived 'company' of Mauchly and Eckert (they went broke and Sperry-Rand had to bail them out by buying rights to the machine). The US Army took it over (having paid for it in the first place) and John Von Neuman suggested the Army should CHANGE certain parts of it.

ENIAC was NOT the "First" electronic computer. Get used to it.

>ABC was not finished until 1998.

Bullshit. What I described was a REPLICA. Built by the Computer Sciences Department of Iowa State. Between 1942 and about 1994 (a mere 52 years), the original "ABC" had been scrounged for parts for other projects. All that remained of the original (in the 1990s) was one memory drum. Atanasoff and Berry kept good notes and diagrams, even wrote some internal papers about the "ABC." Those were used to build the REPLICA.

"ABC" used a revolving drum holding capacitors for electronic memory storage...each capacitor storing one binary bit. "ABC" had a "recharge" section which would keep the bit capacitors' charges up for as long as it was on. Note: In the 1939-1942 time frame there was no such thing as a magnetic memory drum to use by anyone. [magnetic recording was not yet mature in that time frame, but it was available...barely] Atanasoff and Berry had to use what was available. "High-speed" mass memory didn't exist until the invention of the "Williams tube" in the UK, the one using a CRT faceplate with conductive foil in small patches on it to form an equivalent charge storage for each bit.

ENIAC was NEVER replicated in its original form. At best is a Moore School internal project for "ENIAC on a chip," putting the whole thing on a single IC. That info is on the ENIAC website, perhaps of interest, perhaps not since Intel had the FIRST CPU-on-a-chip decades ago.

>But the original ABC was never fully operational, nor complete.

It was COMPLETE. It was FULLY OPERATIONAL as to its intended tasks.

The "ABC" was intended to be used to solve certain problems. It did that. While it was NEVER intended to solve "all-purpose" computing problems (as if the modern mainframes had existed in 1939 to use as a model of that), it was FULLY OPERATIONAL enough for a court to decide which electronic computer was FIRST.

>Doesn't change the validity of what I wrote. The ENIAC was completed >and operational by 1946. ABC was not.

False. Firstly, YOU NEVER mentioned the "ABC." Secondly,
"ABC" was completed and operational by 1942, four years prior to the ENIAC first running.

>The patent in question was not >relevant to which machine was the first general purpose, high speed, >electronic digital computer.

The TIME FRAME is the relevant item, Jimmie, the TIME FRAME.
1939 to 1942 is WELL BEFORE the ENIAC.

Further, John Mauchly essentially committed intellectual property theft of certain aspects of "ABC" to use in ENIAC.

Trashcan the "high speed" adjectives for ENIAC, Jimmie.
It is NOT "high speed" at all. It was slower in operation than my Apple][+ of 1980. It was slower than ALL of the first personal electronic computers made in the 1960s and 1970s. "Programming" of ENIAC sometimes "took weeks" for a single task according to some REAL computer history sites and textbooks.

>> That sort of SELECTIVE highlighting with the sin of >> omission or related facts is what the ARRL does most of >> the time.
>That's just sour graoes in your part, Len. Completely untrue.

I've never tasted a "sour graoe." What is it?

The ARRL DOES 'sin by omission' of lots of radio-electronic history. 'Sin of omission' refers to mentioning ONLY what the ARRL thinks is relevant for amateur radio and to make prospective members think they can join a completely 'honest' organization. ARRL is also a POLITICAL ENTITY, Jimmie, it lobbies for things it wants, but says what it wants is "for the good of amateur radio." [typical POLITICAL spin]

Sorry, Jimmie, but what I wrote IS completely TRUE. Try untwisting your knickers a bit and quit trying to defend the ARRL as if you were an army of one. [you've never served in any military, don't know how to fight for your or anyone else's life] ARRL IS a political entity and deserves every comment it gets, good or bad.

Sorry, but I see absolutely NO "obligation to perform some service [to the nation or community]." That is one of the myths promulgated by the ARRL and its followers.

The word "service" used by the FCC all throughout Title 47 C.F.R., all Parts, is a regulatory term referring to a type and kind of radio activity being regulated.
[see Citizens Band Radio SERVICE or Radio Control Radio SERVICE as two examples in Part 95] Also, as Cecil Moore
mentioned, the government is doing its citizens a service,
NOT the other way around.

If an individual WANTS to VOLUNTARILY perform some service, then excellent. There is NO "obligation" to do so unless there is some law requiring it. Personally, I think all citizens of the USA should do at least one term of Jury Service. In California there is a state law that eligible citizens shall serve, for a time and times as stated by law. [I've done five terms of Jury Service here] Anyone who WANTS to voluntarily sit in on a court is allowed to (with some special conditions not permitting certain trials). Those spectators are NOT obligated to do so.

USA amateur radio service is a VOLUNTARY activity. It is an avocation, not an occupation. In other words it is a HOBBY. It's a fine hobby, tens of thousands of citizens engaged in it. But, it is still a HOBBY. It is NOT "essential" for the good of the nation. It is high time that everyone quit dreaming about imaginary glory of "serving the community" through amateur radio...time to look at what it IS in the real world.

Len I must take issue with you while I have come to dislike the ARRL
it doesnot deserve many of the coments it gets

It does not deserve (although it tries to claim cridet for the current tech license) it does not deservse cridet (or blame) for the fact we all know (but maybe jim that NoCode Hf (at least for the general class and likely extra as well) is coming soon (at least in ham radio terms)

there is plenty put on the ARRL good and bad that it realy has nothing

you left out something there is one other type of service to oneself

I do think we are obligated to preform one type of service and learning something counts

additional in an emergency if we find we can be a of service I'd say we have a moral duty to serve as humans and citizens and our radios give ways not avalable to many another type of real service we can perfrom (although some hams like Robeson seem unable to do so) is simply one to one diplomacy

I know during the elian Matter I enjyed tlaking abit to few cubans (helped that I was vsiting florida for part of that it drew an interesting response from them when I said something like you know if the case were of people totaly within the USA the father would have to go the florida himself most likely if he wanted his kid back and givent he US does not trust the cuban govt...

"And no, I did not have sex with my son. But if I did I certainly she may be a liar and committer of incest with her own son, in MID:

He replied, "We kept the receipts." -- Anon.

Looney Maroon nominee for August 2006 Johnny D Wentzky foamed:
"You never asked someone who goes into areas of the internet that are only for adults who has an underage id somehow or another if they are a cop posing as an underage person online?
I guess lots of people just don't watch dateline or read stories much.
Why don;t you go to pervertedjustice,com and see what they do. They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they lied to membners of the public.
They are awash in their self-proclaimed glory after they posed as an underage person and agreed to do all sorts of sex acts wioth adult males, and they are adults posing as teenager themselves. They make themsleves into liars by falsely impersonating underage persons and by not fuilfilling the words they tell the victims online in their chats.
Why don't you read it where they tell these victims of their deceit about how they have been with grown men and such? Why don't you read it where they say, "That would be cool." after someone makes an advance towards an adult who is posing as a teenager? And, where they agree to meet the person, etc.

Lost control, didn't you?
Is that why you feel as if you need to lie so much now? I see where lots of these false impersonation games are not sticking. They feel as if they can lie and then order the victims to get counseling in the gayblade, governmental, pro-choice tax leech counseling centers. I'd probably see Incentive Licensing the same way if I was a kid in your shoes. However you came into ham radio when it was already old news and were something like 14 years late to the Novice game I played in in all it's nooks and crannies. You can read about it and talk about early '50s ham radio it but since you didn't actually live it I wouldn't expect you to fully appreciate what a huge deal Incentive Licensing was to my Novice class. It was even more of a kick in the butt for for the old-timers of those days.

The FCC doesn't play silly games like that. If the guy in QRZ.com has it right they screwed up a bit and need to tweak the R&O. No relections on the ARRL one way or the other but the FCC will come out of it a bit of egg on it's face.

Because historically we've also been treating 80 & 75 as two separate bands. Convenient ancient custom.

"Consider that language a moment. 'Purposefully and materially supported hostilities against the United States' is in the eye of the beholder, and this administration has proven itself to be astonishingly impatient with criticism of any kind. The broad powers given to Bush by this legislation allow him to capture, indefinitely detain, and refuse a hearing to any American citizen who speaks out against Iraq or any other part of the so-called 'War on Terror.'

"If you write a letter to the editor attacking Bush, you could be deemed as purposefully and materially supporting hostilities against the United States. If you organize or join a public demonstration against Iraq, or against the administration, the same designation could befall you. One dark-comedy aspect of the legislation is that senators or House members who publicly disagree with Bush, criticize him, or organize investigations into his dealings could be placed under the same designation. In effect, Congress just gave Bush the power to lock them up." -- William Rivers Pitt

They said you were a professional, Len. You proclaim yourself to be a PROFESSIONAL.

No more than you are, Len. And no less.

That's your solution, Len.

Are you his friend?

Of course. Has any of your input been rejected?

"Accept" doesn't mean "agree with" or "act on".

You're a special interest group, Len. A group of one ;-)

All they have to do is accept the stuff and put it on the website.
Doesn't mean they take you seriously, Len.

Besides, it was you who gave W3RV the idea about how FCC treats your "input".

Remember this?:

http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.amateur.policy/msg/b31fcc8398024c56?dmode=source

Some quotes:

"In 1951 there was no Internet, no easy way to "talk" to the FCC except through legal outfits and lobbying organizations all using the "proper" format in their paperwork. Everything was surface mail if you couldn't afford special couriers. The League could afford a legal firm then and they filed nice legalese documents with the Commission. With a relative scarcity of correspondence incoming they could pay attention to the League then. The League enjoyed a high place on amateur regulation correspondence with the FCC then. Any individual writing longhand, without legal terms or in any "approved" format got chuckled at."

You weren't at FCC then or now, but you claim to know how FCC reacted to "input" back then.

"Things were more "patrician" then. Things are a bit different now."

How do you know for sure they're not chuckling at - or groaning over - your "input"?

"Internet access to ALL government is faster than overnight express mail. FCC has to accept ALL filings. By law."

That was true in 1951 as well as today.

Besides, "accept" doesn't mean "take seriously",

"The correspondence on hot- ticket Dockets is enormous compared to more than a half century ago. ALL radio has increased in scope and the FCC is stuck with having to regulate an enormous set of radio services affecting millions and millions more than existed in 1951."

All the more reason for them to sort out the comments worth reading....

If the FCC "chuckled at" the comments of some individuals in 1951, why wouldn't they do so today?

Yup. Mistakes, errors, things that aren't true.

> Illuminate the group with your > godly light and tell me that OPINIONS are "factual." :-)

Opinions are not sacred, Len. Not even yours. The mere fact that someone holds an opinion does prevent it from being a falsehood.

For example, you may be of the opinion that the moon is made of green cheese, or that it is 500 miles from Vladivostok to Tokyo. Both are falsehoods.

Also, you are not clear about when you are providing an opinion and when you are providing an alleged fact. You do not usually qualify your statements with phrases like 'I think' or 'I feel' or 'IMHO'. Instead, you state your opinions as if they are unquestionably true facts. They aren't.

Not for any particular individual, anyway.

That's a falsehood, Len. ARRL talks about the service provided by amateur radio, but does not say there is an obligation to do so.

Agreed!

However, one of the justifications for the continued existence of the Amateur Radio Service is the public service performed by radio amateurs using amateur radio.

What does that mean?

Amateur Radio does indeed perform public service - voluntarily. That's a fact, not an opinion.

What about a moral obligation?

Suppose I were driving on a winding country road and came upon the scene of a one-car accident that had occurred only a few minutes before I arrived.

And suppose the occupants of the car in the accident needed help, and I had the means to call for help.

Would I not have at least a moral obligation, if not a legal one, to call for help?

Suppose the only available communication was by Amateur Radio - would I not have at least a moral obligation, if not a legal one, to use Amateur Radio to call for help?

> Personally, I think all
> citizens of the USA should do at least one term of Jury

Even those who are not mentally or physically competent to do so? Would you want to be judged by a jury composed of the mentally ill? They're citizens.

Because he's a non-stakeholder who has been blatantly abusing his right to comment on matters before the FCC involving the amateur service for years. A presumption based on applied common sense and experience.

indeed the cash is problem I was well on the way leading to the NPRM then the backer back out thinking the FCC is finaly goign to take care
it

the longer thay wait the more likely the challange become but they (the ffc) are on record as saying it will be out after the onibus and before the end of the years

Steveo.........Morkins really REALLY likes you. Would you talk to him and ask him to stop playing on the computer and start playing with my boobs and cock?

The ARRL is three things in one. It is a national membership organization; it is a publishing company; it is a political entity with both a Lobbying firm and a Legal firm on retainer in DC.

The publishing effort of the triad makes enough profit to sustain the 'services' it offers to members and to keep the Lobbying and Legal firms billing payments. Membership dues won't pay for even a tenth of the total upkeep of the ARRL.
The publishing part offers the ARRL a virtual monopoly of control of US amateur's opinions via graphics and text.
You don't see any conditioned thinking possible with having a virtual control of US amateurs' opinions?

Since the Lobbying and Legal part of the triad is a POLITICAL effort, the ARRL is also a POLITICAL ENTITY. In the grand old American tradition for over two centuries, political entities are fair game for any person, any time, any where.

>tech license) it does not deservse cridet (or blame) for the fact we >all know (but maybe jim that NoCode Hf (at least for the general class

Details of the ARRL's 92-year history are simply details of history. PRESENT-DAY facts are that the ARRL is also a POLITICAL ENTITY...a SPECIAL INTEREST GROUP.

I WILL stay with what I've said about the ARRL.

Yes they are, Jimmie. Amateur extra morsemen hold the code tell "falsehoods" because they are against it. :-)

"falsehood." But, because it IS an opinion, PREVENTS it from being a "falsehood." :-)

A MILITARY VETERAN, Jimmie, something you will NEVER be.
Hans is a veteran, Frank is a veteran, Brian Burke is a veteran.

When one takes an Oath putting their LIFE on the line in military service it becomes very serious indeed. One helluva lot MORE SERIOUS than having some amateur radio hobby with imagined self-glory.

Both. You can read it via:

cranium.

"Irrelevant?!?" Talk about Jimmie and VAPORWARE!

Jimmie, the FCC grants licenses to US radio amateurs.
The FCC regulates ALL of US civil radio. They do that by LAW, not from some moralistic jingoism spouted by an amateur organization.

If you (politely) ask the FCC for a definition of how THEY use the word 'service' you will get the one that I got, the one I have to repeat every once in a while in here to keep some of you straight.

Still unconvinced after reviewing the Communications Act of 1934? The Telecommunications Act of 1996? Okay, you just consider the FCC and the US government "IRRELEVANT."

>What about a moral obligation?

What about it? You are going to PREACH something to the 'heathen' in here? :-)

>Suppose I were driving on a winding country road and came upon the >scene of a one-car accident that had occurred only a few minutes before

Question should be "why did you force that car off the road?"

Law enforcement people will ask you that after they survey your damaged fender and bumper.

>And suppose the occupants of the car in the accident needed help, and I >had the means to call for help.

Is your throat and larynx working properly? Feel free to call out all you want.

>Would I not have at least a moral obligation, if not a legal one, to >call for help?

I don't know the state of your supposed goody-two-shoes "morals" but I would imagine that law enforcement folks WILL want to know WHY you are driving on winding country roads at night?

>Suppose the only available communication was by Amateur Radio - would I >not have at least a moral obligation, if not a legal one, to use >Amateur Radio to call for help?

You will NATURALLY do so using radiotelegraphy. :-)

Your "morality" is all tied up in some obsessive knot having to do with morse code telegraphy...for AMATEURS.

So, law enforcement folks will still want to know WHY you forcing other cars off the winding country roads...is it to play 'rescueman' on your little hobby radio?

>> Personally, I think all
>> Service.
>Even those who are not mentally or physically competent to do so?

Tsk, tsk, tsk, California state law is strict about WHO can be on a jury panel. The mentally ill won't be on one.

Neither will previously-convicted felons.

However, the mentally-challenged have managed to keep the morse code test in place by lobbying the FCC about it. So far.

Why do you want to be associated with the mentally ill?

>> USA amateur radio service is a VOLUNTARY activity. It is >> an avocation, not an occupation. In other words it is a >> HOBBY.
>But it's not just a hobby.

Sorry, it IS...despite the imaginary pipe-dreaming of being some kind of 'hero' rescuing folks in times of disaster or reading ARRL news squibs and associating that imagination with some 'vital service to the nation' or other pap.

>> It's a fine hobby, tens of thousands of citizens >> engaged in it.
>Hundreds of thousands of US citizens.

Including the MENTALLY ILL. :-)

Certainly the over-imaginative self-deluded souls who describe themselves as 'heroes' without ever doing ONE thing to PROVE their 'heroism.' :-)

>> But, it is still a HOBBY. It is NOT >> "essential" for the good of the nation.
>Says who?

Says the FCC, says every public safety agency and radio service, including the maritime world, the aviation world, the railroad world, the trucking industry, etc. etc. etc.

If amateur radio were "essential for the good of the nation," there would be NO need for public safety radio services in the PLMRS. There would be NO need for any government radio services. AMATEURS could 'do it all.' Except they can't.

Amusing thing is that US amateur radio was SHUT DOWN for two World Wars. During times of the greatest NEED for all citizens to do their part, ham radio was SHUT DOWN. Reconcile that.

>Does amateur radio not perform any service to the community, Len?

Yes, it keeps some of the mentally ill busy, occupied with ham radiotelegraphy so that they won't bother the rest of us normal citizens...normal citizens who ARE doing services to their community, their state, their nation.

Now you just keep reading the ARRL newsletters like a good little member, absorbing all the 'praise' for 'your' efforts in having a radio hobby. That should fuel your ego for a century or two.

As ever to you, ByteBrothers famous phrase invoked.

Many opinions are factual, Leonard. Didn't you know that? Not everything is subjective. Sometimes you make factual errors. Sometimes you tell falsehoods because you don't know the facts. Sometimes you know the facts and write something false despite your knowing.

Sorry, Len. I've documented nothing. I've offered no proof. You have only my claims. I've discussed my service on some web sites. You could find them if you're on the ball. Still, there's nothing on those web sites in the way of actual documentation. There is an easily found web

I didn't write anything of glorious heroism, Len. I did serve in war time. I was in the country where the war was taking place. I drew combat pay for my entire stay in that country. I'm choosing not to document it for you. Now what? Are you going to tell a recruiter about me? Will you suggest to Brian Burke that he contact the "Stolen Valor" folks.

I might propose that to the FCC.

20 wpm Extra's have more important QSO's than nickle hams and

As it turns out, I didn't miss anything when I took my General, Advanced, and Extra writtens. Missed a few on the Novice written, but I was just starting out and I didn't have a novice theory book that was up to date. Still, if the score to pass a written exam would have been 85%, I would have studied a lot harder.

Studying harder makes you better.

The CW speed for repeater ID's should be lowered so new hams can feel pride in knowing what repeaters they're kerchunking. The ARRL recommends 5 WPM for repeater ID's but the FCC disagrees and suggests the speed should be lower because some individuals may have tested with W5YI and might only know CW to 2 WPM. Repeaters with voice ID's must be programed to talk slower to accomodate hams like Markie who are still learning the alphabet. Elmers who want to help new hams with their CW repeater ID skills, should focus on the letters found in phrases like "Welfare check" or "Food Stamps" as restructured hams are more familier with these terms. When a restructured ham can correctly identify the words "government-handout" or "breaker one nine", they're ready to ID repeaters on their own.

We should welcome new hams all that we can by slowing down repeater ID's.

"Slow Code" does not use his real name or call here. He's obviously looking for a reaction - aka trolling. He could be anybody. He could be Len Anderson, Brian Burke, Mark Morgan or someone else like Vshah101 or Cutie Boy. The fact that he says he's a 20 wpm Extra doesn't mean he (or she) is.

Thanks for the advice. I already went with Yaseu. Got a good deal on it. Listening to it right now. I'm picking up 12 repeaters on the duck even picks up 800 MHz police and am air. I'm in hog heaven.

Nope. Not at all. You are mistaken.

http://ftp.arl.mil/~mike/comphist/61ordnance/chap2.html

And another:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Eniac

There's also the book about ENIAC, which you probably haven't/won't read.

> In itself that material is either incomplete or > erroneous...such as the extravagant claim that

Nope. Not at all. You are mistaken.

ENIAC did change the world. It was the true beginning of modern computing. It's the root of the tree:

http://ftp.arl.mil/~mike/comphist/61ordnance/chap7.html

Is the US Army wrong?

> The FACT is that tomorrow, Thursday, 19 October, marks

So what? That does not contradict what I wrote.

ENIAC was the world's very first fully operational, high speed, general purpose, electronic digital computer.

That's what I wrote before, and it's a fact.

> The judge's > decision was that Iowa State University had it, the

The judge was ruling on the patents, not on which machine was the world's very first fully operational, high speed, general purpose, electronic digital computer. Which was ENIAC

No one denied that - not even Mauchly himself.

The Iowa State PR site.

The ABC was not even a true computer.

The facts, Len. It was part electronic and part electromechanical.
Motors and switching drums, storage of intermediate results on paper, and much more.

Which prove my point.

Nope. It was never fully operational. It never completed a full-scale calculation.

Was the judge an engineer?

The judge was ruling on the patents, not on which machine was the world's very first fully operational, high speed, general purpose, electronic digital computer. Which was ENIAC.

> [TRY to get used to that, Jimmie, I know it

The ABC was not a computer in the modern sense. Or even in the 1945 sense.

All the ABC was designed to do was to solve systems of linear equations. It could not do anything else.

By definition, a true computer is Turing-complete. ENIAC was Turing-complete, ABC was not. ENIAC was a true computer, ABC was not. End of story.

Boy, Len, you really are on a roll with the mistakes. You make 'em in quantity!

ENIAC was fully operational at the Moore School and at the Aberdeen Proving Grounds. That's not an opinion - it's the official Army history:

http://ftp.arl.mil/~mike/comphist/61ordnance/chap2.html

> The US Army took it over (having paid > for it in the first place) and John Von Neuman suggested > the Army should CHANGE certain parts of it.

Eckert and Mauchly came up with the idea and convinced the Army to fund
it. The Army accepted and used ENIAC for almost a decade.

The improvements suggested by John Von Neumann (note the spelling) were later incorporated, as were other improvements by the original inventors.

> ENIAC was NOT the "First" electronic computer.

Who said it was? Not me.

purpose, electronic
digital computer.

ABC was a special purpose calculator.

Because the original was never fully operational. Explain how something that is not fully operational can be complete.

See

An electromechanical system. Not electronic.

So they used an electromechanical system rather than an electronic system. They also used paper storage for intermediate results.

So? What's your point?

> ENIAC was NEVER replicated in its original form.

Doesn't matter. Even as ENIAC was being built, Eckert and Mauchly thought up improvements, which wound up in EDVAC. They could not be included in ENIAC because the design phase was over. Had to meet the schedules.

ENIAC worked for almost a decade. The original ABC was never fully functional and was abandoned for more than five decades.

Irrelevant.

Incorrect on both counts. See:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Atanasoff-Berry_Computer

All the ABC could do was solve systems of linear equations. That's all Atanasoff intended, and he abandoned the machine for other work. He and Berry did not challenge the ENIAC patents - Honeywell did, because IBM was trying to use them to monopolize the industry. That monopoly attempt backfired on Big Blue.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Honeywell_v._Sperry_Rand

> The "ABC" was intended to be used to solve certain

Systems of linear equations and nothing else. That's a special-purpose calculator, not a computer. ENIAC was a true computer, ABC was not. End of story.

The court was about the patents.

A patent does not require a fully operational example, either. All it requires is that the concept not contradict known science.

How? What elements were used? The addition-subtraction method was completely different. ENIAC did not use an electromechanical drum and did not use binary.

If anything, Mauchly was more influenced by the counting circuits he had used previously for other purposes.

Irrelevant.

ENIAC was high speed because it was orders of magnitude faster than anything that had existed before. ABC used a 60 Hz clock - ENIAC was more than 100 times faster. Faster than any previous machine by at least an order of magnitude, usually by several orders of magnitude.

You're really on a roll with the nonsense, Len. Give a concrete, factual example for a change. Oh wait - you can't. Facts aren't your style.

"The good of amateur radio" is an opinion, Len. Aren't they allowed to put forth an opinion?

No, it isn't. It's a typical bunch of your errors, mistakes, and general attention-seeking nonsense.

Why should you let facts stand in the way, Len? That's not your style.

We can all toss comments at all NPRMs, that's not the point. The topic under discussion is Anderson's behavior during ham NPRM commenting periods and the way the FCC probably handles his "comments". As far as stakes go Anderson himself made it transparently clear years ago that he has no stake whatsoever in the regulation of the amateur radio service when he stated that he is not a ham and does not have any intention of becoming a ham in the future.

Flooding the FCC with 200 comments on one ham radio NPRM is juvenile and abusive behavior every way you look at it. And it's not in the direction of supporting the cause of you NCTAs.

> did you read a different constituions than I

Again that's not the point, the point is how his submissions are regarded and dealt with after the FCC has processed them in accordance with all the laws under which they operate. You gotta be as naive as a newborn if you think the FCC attaches as much value to any of Anderson's nonsense as they do, for instance, to the inputs submitted by the ARRL.

Well, Len, I drive on winding country roads at night quite frequently.
In six years, the police have never been curious as to why I was driving on such a road. Is there some sort of prohibition in your area?

Is this some profile fulfillment thing on your part, Len?
How would you handle the reporting of an accident. Would you use your little cellular phone? If you lived out my way, you wouldn't be able to. You'd have to be at least fifteen or sixteen miles away for the cellular phone to work. If you drove the other direction, it'd be twenty or thirty miles.

That's right, Len. I'll bet there are some mentally ill folks driving cars out near you. I'll bet some live in your neighborhood. The law says that they may roam freely unless they are judged to be a danger to themselves or others. Why, we've even got one of the local crazies posting here.

The FCC say's that the 20 wpm extras or no more important than someone with just 5 wpm. Isn't that why they changed it from 20 to 5 wpm for ALL HF LICENSE CLASSES. What your talking about is that you don't want to follow FCC rules. If there is a QSO on a frequency YOU should move not the people already there. Unless you have emergency traffic you have NO priority over anyone who is licensed to operate on any giving frequency. Have you even past a ham test? Maybe your license should be revoked until you can prove you have read and fully understand the part 97 FCC rules.

Would the term "self-glory" come into play in discussing a guy who went into great detail describing what it was like to undergo an artillery barrage, except that he had never been involved in such an event? Would you be inclined to describe such an individual as a sort of imposter? It is certainly something for you to ponder.

People don't "work for" the Church, Rosenberg. What the fuck do you think this is - McDonald's or something?

Sure....after someone asked them if you were a minister for their church, they "heard of you." Now they know you for the fake rev that you are.

It might as well be for you, since you certainly aren't a minister of the Anglican Church.

So who exactly "asked them", Rosenberg? Be specific, now.

Do you often talk to piles of sewage, Rosenberg? Are you a rabbi?

A child in a geezer's pants. If he keeps playing that stupid game he's liable to find out the hard way that the feds have some very unpleasant ways of "calling games off".

Yeah why didn't we think of that? 'Course the Colonel has all those Nah it's sorta like the last yawn of daylight.

> Chasin' the XF4?

No, I'm still not up and running. I'm very close to having half-wave verticals for 20 & 15 strung up but this place has turned out to be a whole lot more work than I bargained for when I moved in. For now radio is and has been taking a back seat to buckets of paint and varnish and beyond but there's no way I won't be on the air within the month. Even if it's only on 20 & 15 with the 847, P/S the mic and the paddles. Next up will be 2M via a quickie whip. Getting on 40 & 30 is a possibility but that'll be a race against the WX and I doubt that I'll beat Mother Nature so I'm not banking on it. "Wait'll next year!" <grumble> bunch (i'll accept your count till len says different) of reply coment in the period set aside for that that is on paper at aleast how the system is suposed to work doing things the right way is abusive in your mind?

Man, she's looking like the odds-on fave for KOTY! Too bad, Ernie, but at least you came in tied for third! With Wollkook, no less, and two votes behind Sco-vile.

I knew there was a reason I stopped calling him "Woger". "Wabbit" is just so much more descriptive of his character, anyway...Now Mark and Wabbit can bop each other with the other's respective awards! Should be fun to watch..."You're boring!" "your a pain"

Alas, no one else stood a chance against the Mop Jockey/Daedalus

Damn! Two losses for the alt.atheism duo -- and Alford is _much_ more idiotic than Barwell, who at least is attempting a facade of an argument, unlike Septic, who seems completely unable to discern the difference between agnosticism and theism.

Marcus and Russ must simply try harder, I think. But they're new at kooking-out, so let's give 'em a break.

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Abbie Hoffman merely wanted to levitate it." -- Paul Krassner, http://tinyurl.com/ehu3v

Amateur Radio Newsgroups: Total Meltdown
Paul W. Schleck (K3FU) on April 26, 2006
View comments about this article!

Way back in 1972, before there was a World-Wide Web, even before there was Usenet News, amateur radio enthusiasts on the then-ARPANet organized a mailing list known as Info-Hams. In 1979, a couple of researchers at Duke and UNC developed a system that used "Unix to Unix File Copy" or "uucp" to copy files from one system to another, to make a broadcast bulletin-board system called "Usenet." The Info-Hams mailing list eventually gatewayed to this system, becoming fa.info-hams

Fast-forward to the present, and the newsgroups rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy are now in complete meltdown (the *.antenna, *.dx, *.equipment, and *.space newsgroups still seem to be in good shape, though). Both forums are almost completely bereft of any topic discussion. Instead, one can find run-on threads consisting of short, sniping, and personal attacks containing obscene language from what must be fewer than a dozen, mostly anonymous, users.

What happened? -- Maybe too many run-on arguments about code, or attacks on individual ham's personal character. Maybe just the anarchy and Tragedy of the Commons that is encouraged by totally-open, unmoderated forums where no one is obliged to obey any rules, and no competent authority seems able or willing to enforce them if there were

any. Further fanning the flames are free, and anonymous, news posting sites like Google Groups, Yahoo, etc., as well as any news site that simply doesn't care to enforce any net etiquette among its users. Some hams have even offered the explanation that better enforcement of amateur radio regulations by Riley Hollingsworth at the FCC has had the

less restrictive forum to wreck.

As for Google Groups, it certainly deserves credit for archiving most newsgroup discussions since 1981 (thanks to old backup tapes meticulously maintained by Henry Spencer at the University of Toronto),

but also a big raspberry for contributing to this problem.

This hasn't happened to every newsgroup. Even though other newsgroups have trolls, there seems to be a "immune system" of constructive users who step in both to ostracize problem users, and continue positive contributions in the face of such troublemakers. Certainly this behavior is not tolerated on web logs such as qrz.com and eHam.net. The site owners simply would not allow it. There is at least one example of a licensed radio amateur who is Dr. Jekyll on the blogs, but Mr. Hyde on rec.radio.amateur.policy. There may even be others.

I'm sure some would argue that Usenet is obsolete, and we are all better off going to moderated blogs. Still, I can't help but think that something is being lost here. For example, 20 years into the future, will we be able to read archived and indexed articles from most web logs that exist today, as we now have with Google Groups? Are there constructive solutions to the meltdown on rec.radio.amateur.*, such as converting newsgroups to moderated status, even if such moderated status is simply a self-approval, or anonymous user filter, mechanism?

If I might answer your question, what did we lose: what you lose on
moderated web blogs is annonymity. Yes, you can have annonymity more or less, but somebody somewhere has to approve your posting and your password,
and they have your email, it is a bit more of a digital paper chain than on usenet.

You also lose the ability to go off topic. Some fora are more strict in this regards than others, but there it is: sometimes relating one issue to something seemingly off-topic is lost, with it, the freedom to address big picture questions.

You lose the ability to cross post.

Etc... there are many others

Amateur Radio Newsgroups: Total Meltdown
Paul W. Schleck (K3FU) on April 26, 2006
View comments about this article!

Way back in 1972, before there was a World-Wide Web, even before there was Usenet News, amateur radio enthusiasts on the then-ARPANet organized a mailing list known as Info-Hams. In 1979, a couple of researchers at Duke and UNC developed a system that used "Unix to Unix File Copy" or "uucp" to copy files from one system to another, to make a broadcast bulletin-board system called "Usenet." The Info-Hams mailing list eventually gatewayed to this system, becoming fa.info-hams

(fa = "From ARPANet"), then rec.ham-radio, then rec.radio.amateur.*.

Fast-forward to the present, and the newsgroups rec.radio.amateur.misc
and rec.radio.amateur.policy are now in complete meltdown (the
*.antenna, *.dx, *.equipment, and *.space newsgroups still seem to be in good shape, though). Both forums are almost completely bereft of any topic discussion. Instead, one can find run-on threads consisting of short, sniping, and personal attacks containing obscene language from what must be fewer than a dozen, mostly anonymous, users.

What happened? -- Maybe too many run-on arguments about code, or attacks on individual ham's personal character. Maybe just the anarchy and Tragedy of the Commons that is encouraged by totally-open, unmoderated forums where no one is obliged to obey any rules, and no competent authority seems able or willing to enforce them if there were

any. Further fanning the flames are free, and anonymous, news posting sites like Google Groups, Yahoo, etc., as well as any news site that simply doesn't care to enforce any net etiquette among its users. Some hams have even offered the explanation that better enforcement of amateur radio regulations by Riley Hollingsworth at the FCC has had the

less restrictive forum to wreck.

As for Google Groups, it certainly deserves credit for archiving most newsgroup discussions since 1981 (thanks to old backup tapes meticulously maintained by Henry Spencer at the University of Toronto),

but also a big raspberry for contributing to this problem.

Amateur Radio Newsgroups: Total Meltdown
Paul W. Schleck (K3FU) on April 26, 2006
View comments about this article!

Way back in 1972, before there was a World-Wide Web, even before there was Usenet News, amateur radio enthusiasts on the then-ARPANet organized a mailing list known as Info-Hams. In 1979, a couple of researchers at Duke and UNC developed a system that used "Unix to Unix File Copy" or "uucp" to copy files from one system to another, to make a broadcast bulletin-board system called "Usenet." The Info-Hams mailing list eventually gatewayed to this system, becoming fa.info-hams

Fast-forward to the present, and the newsgroups rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy are now in complete meltdown (the *.antenna, *.dx, *.equipment, and *.space newsgroups still seem to be in good shape, though). Both forums are almost completely bereft of any

What happened? -- Maybe too many run-on arguments about code, or attacks on individual ham's personal character. Maybe just the anarchy and Tragedy of the Commons that is encouraged by totally-open, unmoderated forums where no one is obliged to obey any rules, and no competent authority seems able or willing to enforce them if there were

any. Further fanning the flames are free, and anonymous, news posting sites like Google Groups, Yahoo, etc., as well as any news site that simply doesn't care to enforce any net etiquette among its users. Some hams have even offered the explanation that better enforcement of amateur radio regulations by Riley Hollingsworth at the FCC has had the

less restrictive forum to wreck.

As for Google Groups, it certainly deserves credit for archiving most newsgroup discussions since 1981 (thanks to old backup tapes meticulously maintained by Henry Spencer at the University of Toronto),

but also a big raspberry for contributing to this problem.

This hasn't happened to every newsgroup. Even though other newsgroups have trolls, there seems to be a "immune system" of constructive users who step in both to ostracize problem users, and continue positive contributions in the face of such troublemakers. Certainly this behavior is not tolerated on web logs such as qrz.com and eHam.net. The

I'm sure some would argue that Usenet is obsolete, and we are all better off going to moderated blogs. Still, I can't help but think that something is being lost here. For example, 20 years into the future, will we be able to read archived and indexed articles from most web logs that exist today, as we now have with Google Groups? Are there constructive solutions to the meltdown on rec.radio.amateur.*, such as converting newsgroups to moderated status, even if such moderated status is simply a self-approval, or anonymous user filter, mechanism?

Who gives a FLYING FCUK what they say on e-ham...??

E-ham is nothing but a cheap, Dollar Store copy of QRZ.com
what makes the bullshi+ published by K1MAN look more professional by comparison. Christ...I'd rather listen to Hap
Holly with his PERPETUALLY BAD COFFEE CAN AUDIO
on the old Westling broadcasts that read the fishwrap published on e-hambone.

POOO ---> PFHBBBBLLLTTTTTTTTT!!!!!!!!!!

Amateur Radio Newsgroups: Total Meltdown
Paul W. Schleck (K3FU) on April 26, 2006
View comments about this article!

Way back in 1972, before there was a World-Wide Web, even before there
was Usenet News, amateur radio enthusiasts on the then-ARPANet organized a mailing list known as Info-Hams. In 1979, a couple of researchers at Duke and UNC developed a system that used "Unix to Unix File Copy" or "uucp" to copy files from one system to another, to make a broadcast bulletin-board system called "Usenet." The Info-Hams
mailing list eventually gatewayed to this system, becoming fa.info-hams

(fa = "From ARPANet"), then rec.ham-radio, then rec.radio.amateur.*.

Fast-forward to the present, and the newsgroups rec.radio.amateur.misc
and rec.radio.amateur.policy are now in complete meltdown (the
*.antenna, *.dx, *.equipment, and *.space newsgroups still seem to be in good shape, though). Both forums are almost completely bereft of any topic discussion. Instead, one can find run-on threads consisting of short, sniping, and personal attacks containing obscene language from what must be fewer than a dozen, mostly anonymous, users.

What happened? -- Maybe too many run-on arguments about code, or attacks on individual ham's personal character. Maybe just the anarchy
and Tragedy of the Commons that is encouraged by totally-open, unmoderated forums where no one is obliged to obey any rules, and no competent authority seems able or willing to enforce them if there were any. Further fanning the flames are free, and anonymous, news posting sites like Google Groups, Yahoo, etc., as well as any news site that simply doesn't care to enforce any net etiquette among its users. Some hams have even offered the explanation that better enforcement of amateur radio regulations by Riley Hollingsworth at the FCC has had the unintended consequence of driving problem hams off the bands and onto a less restrictive forum to wreck.

As for Google Groups, it certainly deserves credit for archiving most newsgroup discussions since 1981 (thanks to old backup tapes meticulously maintained by Henry Spencer at the University of Toronto),

but also a big raspberry for contributing to this problem.

This hasn't happened to every newsgroup. Even though other newsgroups have trolls, there seems to be a "immune system" of constructive users who step in both to ostracize problem users, and continue positive contributions in the face of such troublemakers. Certainly this behavior is not tolerated on web logs such as qrz.com and eHam.net. The

I'm sure some would argue that Usenet is obsolete, and we are all better off going to moderated blogs. Still, I can't help but think that something is being lost here. For example, 20 years into the future, will we be able to read archived and indexed articles from most web logs that exist today, as we now have with Google Groups? Are there constructive solutions to the meltdown on rec.radio.amateur.*, such as converting newsgroups to moderated status, even if such moderated status is simply a self-approval, or anonymous user filter, mechanism?

Who gives a FLYING FCUK what they say on e-ham...??

what makes the bullshi+ published by K1MAN look more
Holly with his PERPETUALLY BAD COFFEE CAN AUDIO
on the old Westling broadcasts that read the fishwrap published
on e-hambone.

POOO ---> PFHBBBBLLLTTTTTTTTT!!!!!!!!!!

The above is probably the best one-liner I've read in this NG for quite some time. Thanks! We needed it.

I'm sure some would argue that Usenet is obsolete, and we are all better off going to moderated blogs. Still, I can't help but think that something is being lost here. For example, 20 years into the future, will we be able to read archived and indexed articles from most web logs that exist today, as we now have with Google Groups? Are there constructive solutions to the meltdown on rec.radio.amateur.*, such as converting newsgroups to moderated status, even if such moderated status is simply a self-approval, or anonymous user filter, mechanism?

Who gives a FLYING FCUK what they say on e-ham...??

what makes the bullshi+ published by K1MAN look more
Holly with his PERPETUALLY BAD COFFEE CAN AUDIO
on the old Westling broadcasts that read the fishwrap published
on e-hambone.

Amateur Radio Newsgroups: Total Meltdown
Paul W. Schleck (K3FU) on April 26, 2006
View comments about this article!

Way back in 1972, before there was a World-Wide Web, even before there was Usenet News, amateur radio enthusiasts on the then-ARPANet organized a mailing list known as Info-Hams. In 1979, a couple of researchers at Duke and UNC developed a system that used "Unix to Unix File Copy" or "uucp" to copy files from one system to another, to make a broadcast bulletin-board system called "Usenet." The Info-Hams mailing list eventually gatewayed to this system, becoming fa.info-hams

Fast-forward to the present, and the newsgroups rec.radio.amateur.misc and rec.radio.amateur.policy are now in complete meltdown (the *.antenna, *.dx, *.equipment, and *.space newsgroups still seem to be in good shape, though). Both forums are almost completely bereft of any

What happened? -- Maybe too many run-on arguments about code, or attacks on individual ham's personal character. Maybe just the anarchy and Tragedy of the Commons that is encouraged by totally-open, unmoderated forums where no one is obliged to obey any rules, and no competent authority seems able or willing to enforce them if there were

any. Further fanning the flames are free, and anonymous, news posting sites like Google Groups, Yahoo, etc., as well as any news site that simply doesn't care to enforce any net etiquette among its users. Some hams have even offered the explanation that better enforcement of amateur radio regulations by Riley Hollingsworth at the FCC has had the

less restrictive forum to wreck.

As for Google Groups, it certainly deserves credit for archiving most newsgroup discussions since 1981 (thanks to old backup tapes meticulously maintained by Henry Spencer at the University of Toronto),

but also a big raspberry for contributing to this problem.

This hasn't happened to every newsgroup. Even though other newsgroups have trolls, there seems to be a "immune system" of constructive users who step in both to ostracize problem users, and continue positive contributions in the face of such troublemakers. Certainly this behavior is not tolerated on web logs such as qrz.com and eHam.net. The

I'm sure some would argue that Usenet is obsolete, and we are all better off going to moderated blogs. Still, I can't help but think that something is being lost here. For example, 20 years into the future, will we be able to read archived and indexed articles from most web logs that exist today, as we now have with Google Groups? Who gives a FLYING FCUK what they say on e-ham...??

what makes the bullshi+ published by K1MAN look more
professional by comparison. Christ...I'd rather listen to Hap

the moderated web blogs is annonymity. Yes, you can have annonymity more or less, but somebody somewhere has to approve your posting and your password,
and they have your email, it is a bit more of a digital paper chain than on
usenet.

in this regards than others, but there it is: sometimes relating one
issue to
picture questions.

You lose the ability to cross post.

Etc... there are many others

A version of the 'say it enough times and some people will think it's true" ploy. Except it doesn't work.

Heck, Len argues with and insults those who agree with him. I suppose former FCC Chairman Michael Powell would have taken warmly to being called "Mikey" by Len....

A spoiled child....

More likely he's just delaying or defeating the changes he says he wants.

btw, didn't FCC issue a ruling of some sort about how many proposals a person or group could submit per year?

I know that there are vanity rules changes in the R&O intended to eliminate multiple applications for vanity calls by the same person, to avoid gaming the odds....

No you don't, you come here and grind your ax for some reason. You want to help? Be positive about ham radio, all of ham radio and not just the niche you want to inhabit. Open your eyes, see the whole hobby and realize those that don't share your tastes are just as competent or incompetent as you.

Translation: They want to keep up with technology and eliminate testing on methods that are plainly antiquated and waning in usefulness and I don't want things to change so I don't lose my relative (perceived) status among hams.

I'd say not much, gets back to the crux of my contention, they won't let him clog the process.

If they did it went over my head. Either way they probably have something like that in place which they keep to themselves.

Anderson pays for a dinner with Britney in a private room at the Dilworthtown Inn.

Speaking of Britney . . there's some scuttlebutt going around to the effect that the FCC is working on a compromise deal on the code test.
No Code Techs upgrading to get HF privs will have a choice. Pass the 13wpm code test or take a written on the material in this website.
Passing grade = 75 min.

1) I was draft into the US Army.
2) I is a member of the Chemcal Cops
3) The military wont let me retire.
4) I dosn't serve under the name 'Mark Morgan but that's okay cuz the FBI, DOD, and CIA have all told me I cando it.
5) I is on-the-lam from stalking former marines and fatal attraction four ex-shemale wife
6) I was recently, paying $5/hr. to access my ISP
7) I has a 248 IQ, but can't figure out how to use a spell checker.
8) I is a bi-sexual Pagan male ham who like to be spanked.
9) I can't find any action on the military base in Central IL, so I hav to ask people on teh USENET.

Oh my, I have some things to do to make to 4500, isn't it?!

So... 100 new pics are not enough, let me see how many I can post tomorrow..... will I really carried away with the beauty
the nekked male? Just wait and find out.

So... 100 new pics are not enough, let me see how many I can post tomorrow..... will I really carried away with the beauty
the nekked male? Just wait and find out.

So... 100 new pics are not enough, let me see how many I can post tomorrow..... will I really carried away with the beauty
the nekked male? Just wait and find out.

Guy goes to the doctor. He says, "Doc, my problem is that I like to have sexual intercourse a lot. A whole lot . In fact, I have it so often it makes blisters and scabs on my wang. I compulsively pick at them, and they bleed. What am I to do?????"

The doctor said, "Don't fuck with it. That'll be 90 bucks for the office visit. Thank you."

Hey, it doesn't really matter anyway.. Legal ID's can be done via a computer voiced audio stream which doesn't require that you know code to understand. Most of the repeaters in my area ID both ways and both are usually just pre-recorded audio files that get played by the repeater controller. It's the wave of the future....

But you knew that..

When someone draws attention to themselves with wild claims, it usually follows that someone else will ask for documentation.

Stolen Valor. It gives anyone the right to ask for documentation when preposterous claims have been made. Robesin

Jim want's to think that his other ways are a substitute for military service, kind of like Clinton's "AmericCorps..." Jim was just ahead of his time in avoiding military service.

Actually, employers get to, and people that are witness to exaggerated claims of "hostile actions" get to. Anyone witnessing exaggerated claims OUGHT to demand proof.

It's a lot like Len being a professional radio, and being told that he'll never be an amateur.

Fair enough. When does Robesin provide documentation of his claims of participating in seven (7) hostile actions?

No bunting. By serving (in the military), you are in the que for whatever comes up. Lots of folks weren't up to it. Jim/N2EY is one such person.

Prolly no more than a guy that got caught claiming participation in seven (7) hostile actions.

Do I look inflamed to you?

The odor of kerosene repels snakes and for good reason.
Kerosene is a natural degreaser.
Snakes are covered with a fine coating of oil.
Kerosene would suck dry the snake's body oil, which probably feels the same as if someone poured hydrochloric acid on your hand. Not very pleasant.
So when a snake smells kerosene,

or more accurately tastes-
-a snake breaths with its tongue-
-they slither in the other direction.
No word on kerosene's ability to tame a wild mullet.

I'd say that a good time would be right after Len bares his soul and admits that he engaged in being an imposter in regard to what it is like to go through an artillery barrage. I'm guessing that won't happen.

I see bunting. Len is wrapped in it.

I didn't like queues when I was in the military. I sure don't have to queue for anything now.

That's a pretty bold supposition on your part. What indicates that someone "wasn't up to it"?

I've seen no detailed description on Steve's part. Len's description was quite detailed, right down to sphincter.

I've always liked Dee. She has always been one of the few here that doesn't mind arguing policy. I don't know how she has been able to stand all the Woger and Markie homo crap posts, but it's good she hung around to take policy. I just wish she didn't want to see ham radio dumbed down more.

Boy, Lenny Anderson is going to be pissed. That's not the sort of CW news he likes to hear. Lucky for the sailor there was still someone out there that knew code.

No, The one year non-renewable no-code hams would be issued callsigns from the old CB callsign blocks of the mid 1970's. After they pass the code test they get a real ham call unless they prefer to keep using the CB one.

It wouldn't take much for him to wipe shit off his face and clean up his act, but he refuses. I try to be nice because I know he's a retarded no-code, but even retards can learn how to use a spell checker. Even people that don't know him see he not palying with a full deck. It was bad the FCC come up with the codeless license. When Markie gets HF the bands will never be the same, a bunch of good hams doing what they can to keep from calling him a Lid, and Markie coming back after every reply with mindless retard babble.

That is true.

The cause for revoking his license is that he has a problem with following the FCC's rules. The rules are there for the benefit all of us. If he doesn't like the rules he should turn in his license in protest not spread hate. What ever happened to the true sprit of ham radio where those with higher knowledge would help left up those with less instead of pushing them down.

SC and Steve are almost the only people who post about policy.

You know marqueer, if you looked to k4yz as a role model that would be your first step in getting the help you need.

From the ARRL today:
quote

==>HAWAIIAN HAMS RESPOND AS EARTHQUAKES STRIKE "BIG ISLAND"

Amateur Radio volunteers scrambled to provide emergency communication and assist with relief efforts after earthquakes October 15 on the "Big Island" of Hawaii. The initial jolt of the so-called "Kona Earthquake" just after 7 AM local time roused many residents from sleep; another followed soon after. Widespread power outages as well as structural and highway damage resulted throughout the Hawaiian Islands, although a feared tsunami never developed and no deaths were reported.

"ARES and RACES operators responded to Hawaii State and Oahu Civil Defense Emergency Operation Centers," reports Hawaii State RACES Coordinator and ARRL State Civil Defense (SCD) Emergency Coordinator Ron Hashiro, AH6RH. Right after Oahu stopped shaking, Hashiro put out a call on the Honolulu 146.88 MHz repeater seeking reports.

"Other stations confirmed the violent shaking," he said. Hashiro started emergency operations on the Honolulu repeater, then proceeded to the inter-island 147.06 MHz repeater system and repeated the sequence. Hashiro, Robin Liu, AH6CP, and Mitch Pinkerton, KH6MP, arrived at the State Emergency Operations Center (EOC) in short order, and RACES operations from KH6HPZ commenced within a half hour of the first earthquake. After checking into HF and VHF nets, ARRL Pacific Section Emergency Coordinator Kevin Bogan, AH6QO, responded to the SCD EOC.

Bogan said the primary focus was on the Big Island, where most damage occurred because the epicenter was so close. "Although buildings on Oahu suffered only minor structural damage, the biggest problem was the power outage due to generators for the island powering down as a safety precaution," he said. "Within minutes of the first earthquake, telephone calls on landline and many cell phone carriers were difficult due to congestion."

Hashiro said operators at the EOC rotated among the HF and VHF operating positions, running messages with the EOC operations desk and checking with staff on their various needs and concerns. The Hawaii Emergency Net on 7088 kHz provided the main HF link in the earthquakes' aftermath. Communication around the Big Island was handled on 7095 kHz. Where Internet remained available, radio amateurs were able to take advantage of Voice over Internet Protocol (VoIP) modes such as EchoLink and IRLP.

At Oahu Civil Defense Agency, RACES Coordinator Ray Moody, AH6LT, responded, while Adrian Ditucci, KH7GK, handled net control service duties from his home a few miles away, operating on battery power.

Other Amateur Radio emergency communication volunteers did "the heavy lifting in the field," Hashiro said. "The key to their success was that they had varying degrees of portable and mobile capabilities with emergency power -- using VHF and HF," he said. "They were able to drive right to the scene and pass along assessments, status reports and messages through us, right into State CD operations."

"For example, Steve, WH6N, passed formal traffic on the condition of a hospital and the closure of a neighboring highway due to a landslide," Hashiro said. "AH6RR and KH7MS passed information on the condition and evacuation of Kona Community Hospital, while WH6WI updated us on the progress and availability of a 1000-person American Red Cross Shelter at the old Kailua-Kona airport." As a precaution, officials evacuated several hospitals in Hawaii until they could check the safety of the structures.

Dozens of tremors followed the initial quake, on the west side of the Island of Hawaii, which measured at 6.7 on the Richter scale. It was the first major earthquake in Hawaii in 20 years. A second quake measured 6.0, Bogan said, and there were many aftershocks. Hashiro says State CD RACES/ARES operations wrapped up at 5:20 PM, while Oahu RACES operations from KH6OCD ended at 10:55 PM. He reports upward of a dozen stations on the Big Island provided HF and VHF communication with SCD, while another seven radio amateurs were active on the island of Maui.

The Salvation Army Team Emergency Radio Network (SATERN) activated for a short time Sunday afternoon on 14.265 MHz to assist with emergency communication to handle health-and-welfare inquiries and traffic.

Hashiro says that unlike some other areas of the US, radio amateurs in Hawaii stress and believe in joint operation -- a collaboration of ARES, RACES, SKYWARN, HealthComm, the American Red Cross, Volunteers Organizations Active in Disaster (VOAD), and SATERN.

"We become one operation, one team to our emergency management partners," he said. "We help each other out and work and train together. That's the only way to operate; there's simply not enough equipped, capable and available operators to go around. Isolated in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, there's not a lot of missteps and mistakes we can afford."

1. I filter the idiots out so I don't see their posts.

2. I do not believe in attacking the new hams as they are not in control of the testing policy.

3. The way to get good hams is to elmer the newcomers in the necessary skills and show them how great it can be not drive them out with derogatory comments.

We can all do our part to create good hams.

Notice that Robesin has no problem with this kind of "ham bashing," but if you even hint that people use cell phones or that there might not be enough volunteers...

No, maybe you wouldn't. Len says something and he's a liar. Robesin says the same thing seven different ways and he's good to go. It's not hard to figure you out.

Sorry Dave, but you're wrong. The Morse Exam uses audio, not actual on-the-air transmissions. I guess you're just not VE material.

indeed if the test were based on air use it might even be possible to ctruct a rational for keeping the test although it would be rough to justify why it is was the only mode so tested but one might make a stab at it

If you have to "send by hand and receive by ear" over the air without the license you're testing for, you'd be llike W3RV bypassing all the testing and regulatory material and just getting on the air without a license. And we wouldn't want that, would we?

I'd make a note, as I wrote, because I never knew that Len was a professional radio. Should the term be "PROFESSIONAL radio"?

Why do you think it might be? It might be that the individual making countless statements of "IMPOSTER" regarding the military service of another, is himself guilty of being an imposter. What do you think about Len's description of what it is like to go through an artillery barrage?

If you're aware of my dislike, kindly fill me in on it. How did my dislike manifest itself? After all, unlike many, I got the job I wanted. I was able to skip technical school.

I think you may be on to something. Do you think that artillery barrage took place in peacetime Japan? Could it have taken place near Greenlee Industries? Might it have been in Len's neighborhood when Len and others in his area were stirred up over zoning changes?

> Robesin

What did Steve say about his actions? Did he ever describe an action which you know did not take place? Do you see a difference? I see an old codger with egg on his face, calling another military veteran an IMPOSTER without a shred of evidence. I did find a web site which lists Steve by full name and USMC rank. Did you find it?

Please forgive Len, Dave. He is on a "mission" and obviously considers himself to be humorist with an ability to color the written word. His facts are oft askew, but he is entertaining from time to time.
If Len blends facts with fiction, so what? He is an entertainer seeking self-gratification by needling those whom he considers to be the dregs of his inferiors on Usenet. Nothing more, nothing less.
Len is, by and large, a non-entity, one best ignored.
As I've noted in the past, Len has many talents, flatus being his ultimate trademark.

Novice - 24,187 (3.7%) [decrease of 25,142]
Technician - 286,314 (43.6%) [increase of 80,920]
Technician Plus - 35,056 (5.3%) [decrease of 93,804]
General - 131,866 (20.1%) [increase of 19,189]
Advanced - 70,623 (10.8%) [decrease of 29,159]
Extra - 108,647 (16.5%) [increase of 29,897]

(percentages may not add up to exactly 100.0% due to rounding)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 321,370 (49.0%) [decrease of 12,884]

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 311,136 (47.4%) [increase of 19,927]

Total all classes - 656,513 (decrease of 18,279)

Note that these totals do not include licenses that have expired but are in the grace period.

They also do not include club, military or other station-only licenses.

Note also that effective April 15, 2000, new Novice, Technician Plus and Advanced licenses are no longer issued.

Since April 15, 2000, FCC has renewed all existing Technician Plus licenses as Technician. By May of 2010, the number of Technician Plus licenses will drop to zero, because all of them will have been renewed as Technician or allowed to expire. It is therefore informative to consider the totals of the two classes, since the Technician class includes a significant number of Technician Plus licenses renewed as Technician.

Unless one does know the distress signal in Morse, why would anyone consider that someone was signaling a problem. They could just as easily have thought it was some kids goofing off.

Who is "Jimmie", Len?

The fact remains that opinions are not sacred. I know that you want your opinions treated as absolutely sacrosanct, and that anyone who challenges your statements has broken a taboo (to you, anyway).

Post your opinions here and they will be challenged, Len. That's the way it works.

> Amateur extra morsemen hold the code > test to be SACRED forever and ever.

What are "amateur extra morsemen", Len?

Some people think a Morse Code test is a good idea. Others do not.
Neither opinion is sacred.

> All those against it tell "falsehoods" because they are against it. :-)

That's a falsehood, Len.

> >Not even yours.

I know that you want your opinions treated as absolutely sacrosanct, and that anyone who challenges your statements has broken a taboo (to you, anyway). But they are not sacred.

> >The mere fact that > >someone holds an opinion does prevent it from being a falsehood.

Typo alert: The above should read:

The mere fact that someone holds an opinion does not prevent it from being a falsehood.

IOW, an opinion can be false. You can hold the opinion that the moon of made of green cheese, but in fact it is not, and that opinion is false.

> Tsk, tsk, tsk, you are arguing against yourself there!

(nonsensical diatribe over a typo snipped).

You state your opinions as if they are unquestionable facts. But they are just opinions, and are often unsupported by facts.

That's another falsehood, Len.

You call K4YZ an imposter because he has not provided you with the proof you seek and dares to disagree with you. It's pretty clear that if he agreed with you on some things, you would tout him as a hero.

You've been asked to provide more details about your experience with a particular artillery barrage you described. But you have not done so.
Does that make you an imposter, Len?
Or just someone who chooses not to provide proof - same as K4YZ?

Who is "Jimmie", Len? How do you know for sure whether this "Jimmie" person was in the military or not?

How do you know for sure who is and is not a veteran? Is Mark Morgan a veteran? Or is he an imposter? (Please note that I am not calling anyone an imposter - I'm just asking how Len can be so sure).

Why not?

You seem to be saying that if a person has not been in the military, they cannot judge anything about the military. Yet many of our country's lawmakers do just that.

You have never been a radio amateur, yet you pronounce all sorts of judgements on amateur radio.

> As ever to you, ByteBrothers famous phrase invoked.

Which phrase is that, Len? Don't you have the guts to spell it out?

btw, Len, you've made it easy to tell when you know you have lost the argument.

Whenever you start wrapping yourself in the bunting of having served in the military, rather than actually debating the issue at hand, it's a sure and clear sign that you know you've lost the argument. Just a variation of the behavior in your profile.

Well, I know "Slow Code" is not me.

Beyond that, he could be anybody with a computer and an internet connection. "Slow Code" could be Len Anderson, who has used at least seven different screen names here - that we know of. "Slow Code" could be Brian Burke, N0IMD, who has used a wide variety of screen names here, ("billy beeper", "hot ham and cheese", to name just a few) usually without including his name or callsign.

"Worthless and Unneeded"? That was NOT the question!! Learn to answer the question! READ THE SUBJECT LINE.

No one asked whether it is useful, it absolutely is, the question is: is it "keeping good people out of ham radio?"

NOPE!!!

How many screen names have you used here - that you know of?

Slow Code could be Jim/N2EY, despite protests that it isn't him. Ditto Robesin, Coslo, Bruce, Dan, Larry Roll, or anyone else who "appears" to be absent from RRAP.

I understand that Brian Burke has received a whole lot less spam email on his regular user account than when he posted here under his name and call. I also understand that he let go of "Billy Beeper" at Han's Brakob's request, as "Billy Beeper" was an invention of Hans, a fictitious boy who feared evil No-Coders.

Is it still Morse Code if the speed is measured in words per hour?

Imagine lighting and extinguishing a torch to send SOS. Bring your lunch and fire extinguisher.

Sorry,
I guess you're just not good HF material, unless it's 11 meters.

Oh we will have Spike Jones and all the others but were adding a bunch, we will have over 3,000 songs on file...Were working on it as I type, I wish it was up and running right now...the 20 meter band is open....I heard some locals say they heard Japan and talk to a few guys in Germany.

Markie is all three all right. His brain doesn't seem to be able to connect the dots. If KB9RQZ would KF all the people he hates, RRAP would be a policy group again instead of a Laugh-at-the-Retard forum.

I'm not against trying to help Markie, but Markie refuses to be helped.
That's why from now on he's: "Mark in the Dark"

SC

The problem with this is that Mark In The Dark doesn't feel he needs help.
In his jumbled mind he is just "defending" his honor. Makes no difference that HE started most of the angst to begin with, does it? That simply does not compute in his dyslexic brain. Mark In The Dark doesn't feel that eighty, ninety, or a hundred posts a day is spam.
I wonder if he abused drugs when he was a kid?

It is not an attempt to "selince" voices we dislike. Don't flatter yourself and don't put words in my statement that simply were not there.
As for the rest of your comment, I'll have to hand it over to Slow Code to
exist in the dictionaries I've looked at.

Get your disjointed thoughts together, Mark. You are contradicting yourself in essence.

"yes I am I have the cowardage of my convictions"

I like that..."cowardage"...neat word and one worth remembering.

Now, isn't it time to put your three-legged horse in the stall? You've gone above and beyond most folks' moral convictions by defending a purveyor of kiddie porn. You are a Hero, Mark. Roger could only hope to live up to your moral standards, such as they are.

but iif you do not want to be taken to task for attacking other epeople then the answer is simple stop attacking other people with your lies and bullshit. I fTood were a pruveyor of Kiddy porn your efforts would have him busted and in jail jail byt now that you have failed proves you have NO case you claim (or was that deloeron who may still be you) claim I am going to be busted off hughes net been pormising that for roughly a year now it doesn't happen

do you do the same thing and stop and rethink your actions? no you go right being a bully You attack Tood becuase sometimes you can provake into a reation you like to make fun of,,, that is the sole reason you attack you prod Roger because his response amusses you and you find watching him foama t the mouth amusing that makes one sick bastard whatever your name is leave roger alone leave Todd alone Id like you to leave me alone but if you want to fight fine bring it on, but if you make fighting with me YOUR choice don't blame me for the resulting mess in the NG

you want policy debate in the NG then post something on radio policy or at least on radio

Todd posts on Omega One are at least radio topics even if not exactly policy topics thereffore as a postive comtributor to the NG he deserves my support and will get it

I act defensively defending myself and others I have even often defended Roger although I frankly think he is beyond all real help beside giving the Noddle as the NAZI's called it and honest for Roger the noodle might well be an act of mercy

all persons have the right and moral duty of self defense, all person have to duty to protect those unfairly attacked to the extent they can you have never been unfairly attacked nor has Robeson or Roger or Hiel or anybody else, BY ME. no actiontion of mine has been anything but defensive.

nothing unclear about the the notion that defense is always a good thing , it gets a bit murky at time when it become clear the only defense is a good offense

Your line of thought is again wandering in circles Mark, and you are tripping over your mental shoelaces in the process.
You have no right to define that what is moral or not moral. Save that for alt.morons or the bisexual groups. Who are YOU to preach of morals?
Mugging? Who mentioned a "mugging"? That is your descriptor, Mark. I merely commented about Todd's addiction to cartoon kiddie porn. While YOU may think that what Todd does is fine, his addiction to same is viewed by 99% of us as being abhorrent and perverted. Like you, I have the "moral duty" to call it

Oops! I didn't spot that problem. I should realised that 'torch' would cause confusion among you benighted Merkins. Being British, but having a Merkin daughter-in-law, I am reasonably bilingual these days. It's very interesting how the English language has diverged. However, be assured that, in the UK, we have progressed to using flashlights and torches interchangeably these days.

Sorry, but I can say for an absolute fact that your 're wrong. It had kept me out of ham radio and I know exactly what kind of person that I am. And before the obligatory "lazy" word is trotted out, I have to work for the pay cheque that buys the radio, pays the rent for the building that the radio is in and pays for the tower that is in the back yard. I have to work extra to pay MORE for a place where I am allowed a tower, as opposed to less expensive digs.

Honestly, I can't believe how some pro-coders look down on no-coders with such contempt. I was once a member of a "live steam" model railroad club. These were larger model steam trains that ran with real steam instead of electric power. They could be run with either propane or coal, depending on the individual. The guys who built their locomotives from scratch NEVER looked down on the guys who bought theirs from a classified ad. The guys burning coal did NOT call the propane guys "lazy". We all enjoyed a fine hobby and club meetings were always good fun and most informative. It was great for a mechanic, like myself, to rub shoulders with experienced retired machinists who built these locomotives. At one of our "open houses", which were located outdoors at the club track, my daughter took her first steps.

Isn't ham radio supposed to be like that? Is there no camaraderie?

Yes ham radio is supposed to be camaraderie. People are supposed to help each other. The divisiveness stems from the fact that too many no-coders appear to want to change the requirements with no knowledge, experience, or understanding of the requirements. In addition, most of us have experienced people who said they could not learn code but upon questioning find that they did not use a good training method and did not train correctly. Yet when they decided they were tired of waiting did learn it and got their upgrade. Then finding out how useful it was in ham pursuits were glad that they had done it.

So far of each of the reasons that people put forth as to why they can't learn it have been disproven by the example of other people with the same problem having gone ahead and done it. The 5wpm level is obtainable although some of the problem do make faster speeds a problem (constant tinnitus may be a severe problem at 20 wpm for example). My ex-OM had 70% hearing loss in both ears and severe tinnitus. He passed the 5wpm. I know people with dyslexia who have passed. The blind have passed. Even the deaf have passed using flashing lights or vibrating pads.

Do you have competitions in your model railroading activity? If you enter that competition, you all have to follow the published rules with no exceptions. If it is a competition for the "homebrewers", then those who don't do so can enjoy viewing them but they cannot enter into the competition.

I haven't really been following this thread, so I'll assume it originated by someone who thinks the code requirement (here in the USA) should be removed from the license requirements. Personally, I don't think it needs to be removed because with a little practice, anyone can do 5 WPM. In fact, I recall a young man of about 5 years old getting his license many years ago...it used to be written up in one of the chapters of the ARRL handbook. If you don't want to learn code, we have the Technician class license for that. Anyhow, where in the rules does it say a ham is required to know code to possibly save a life one day?
It's just something they came up with to use in testing for a license.
From the FCC rules:

97.3 Definitions.
(a) The definitions of terms used in Part 97 are:

(4) Amateur service. A radiocommunication service for the purpose of self-training,
intercommunication and technical investigations carried out by amateurs,
that is,
duly authorized persons interested in radio technique solely with a personal aim and without pecuniary interest.

One place I worked where we sometimes bid on jobs from the UK kept a list of terms with the UK versus US definitions because of the differences in terminology.

Since I know Morse code, it wouldn't be a problem. Just because a light is being flashed, doesn't mean it is a distress signal. If I were standing watch, I'd make sure that I was conversant with the various distress signals that might be used.

Personally I happen to believe it should be kept simply because it is one of the basics of ham radio. Even if one never uses it after, it should be learned at a basic (i.e. 5wpm) level. This later enables the individual to later decide if they want to pursue it to a higher level. If they are not required to learn the basic level, they may forever falsely believe that code is too hard for them.

Well, hopefully it really won't matter too much. I personally hope they take your coveted HF bands for worldwide data communications, and outlaw HF ham radio altogether. You can then hook your key up to a buzzer and code yourself into the grave.

Speaking as a ham licensed for 50+ years, I would say a lot of the divisiveness stems from coded hams trying to substitute Morse code skill for technical knowledge and intelligence.

Ham#1: "I've got a PhD in RF Engineering."

Ham#2: "Who cares, I flunked out of high school but I can do 40 wpm at Morse code. So there!"

Eliminate the code requirement and triple the difficulty of the technical exams. Problem solved.

Nope, won't solve the problem.

The solution is to accept people as true hams that passed the exams existing at the time they were licensed. PERIOD!!

Since she would also not be able to pass the writtens, it's a moot point.

The discussion is only relevant to those that can pass the written but say that they cannot pass the code.

Ian;

Remember what that great American statesmen Winston Churchill once said" We are one people divided by a common language".

Sorry, I don't fuck retards or guys or retarded guys. I have STANDARDS. Of course, that may not be saying much, since I once stump-fucked a calf on a dare after twice the legal limit of tequila.
These days, I am more restrained and just stick to Nyquil and pills.

Suddenly... ah, big deal

The whole purpose of places like Starbucks is for people with no decision-making ability whatsoever to make six decisions just to buy one cup of coffee.
Short, tall, light, dark, caf, decaf, low-fat,
non-fat, etc.
So people who don't know what the hell they're doing or who on earth they are, can, for only $2.95, get not just a cup of coffee
but an absolutely defining sense of self.

It is a fact.

Example: you can call yourself a marine two days after enlistment. But, you become a Marine after completion of basic training! The commitment to success through a period of trial and learning makes the Marine not the uniform.

No-coders have enlisted in the hobby. But, ...

Ignoring the profanity [when profanity surfaces in a discussion it is evidence that you are losing the argument], Maxwell's Equations are first of all NOT Maxwell's equations. They are Heaviside's Equations [go do a rigorous check].

Secondly, the equations describe physics, not operating practice.

Thirdly, the equations and their understanding are not requirements for a license. Most hams cannot perform the vector calculus or solve the second order differential equations necessary to solve those equations [Many professional broadcast engineers probably can't solve them either]. After 40+ years from my EE degree I know I can't solve them without some refresher math courses.

Finally, increasing one's personal skills in the radio communications art and technique for personal improvement, not $ gain, is the requirement for a ham license, at least here in the USA.

Increasing personal skills ... does not mean becoming an appliance operator.

"BASICS" AND "BASIS" are two different words with different meanings.

Basics include Basis among other topics, while Basis is Basic to any topic.

What is meant here, which you deliberately misunderstand, is that to obtain the title of "Amateur Radio Operator" you must first understand "Basic" electronics, Elementary communications "LAW", "Basic" radio operating procedures, "Basic" radio theory, multiple operating techniques, including: Voice, Digital, various modes i.e. AM, FM, etc.
Those of us that support the inclusion of a "BASIC" understanding of CW communications do so because CW is "BASIC" to Amateur Radio Communications. With out the CW ability you are just a partial HAM. With the CW ability you have a more rounder understanding of our hobby. There is no necessity to use CW at anytime in your Amateur Radio lifetime after you demonstrate the ability to receive 25 letters/numbers/punction characters within one minute with out error.

One of the reasons that I don't use CW is that years ago when I got my Novice I was in a QSO with a station and it took me atleast 5 minutes to correctly "HEAR" his call sign. I kept running the letters together. So much for my CW ability. I did , however, pass the Element 1 CW test twice. Once for my novice and once when I went for Tech before I got my Novice ticket. This was taken at the FCC examination site.

Remember your opinions are just as valuable as mine and are of equal status no matter what you may think of mine.

Well, he did do his statesmanship in Great Britain but he was the First and so far only "Honorary American Citizen".

See Wikipedia. Appropriate extract: In 1963 U.S. President John F. Kennedy acting under authorization granted by an Act of Congress, proclaimed Churchill the first Honorary Citizen of the United States. Churchill was too ill to attend the White House ceremony, so his son and grandson accepted the award for him.

Besides his mother was an American Citizen conferring upon Winnie eligibility for his own status of "American Citizen" should he have chosen to exercise it.

I have not experienced EME or FS-ATV or a great many other areas of amateur radio but I have done CW. I don't do it anymore but I have experienced it. CW is the one mode that can get through under almost any condition. You can (I can't anyway) copy CW in the middle of a thunder storm, using the Aurora as a reflector, using meteor ionization trails as a reflector or just direct point to point contact to accomplish this. Try that with FM, AM, SSB voice or digital.

The problem with this and similar threads is a number of individuals do not feel that they need to learn CW because they don't intend to use it.

A person of "Quality" may never need the proper etiquette to greet the Queen but you had better know how to be considered as such a person.

Poor analogy. The Marines NEED harsh training to be able to do their difficult jobs properly as lives and the nation depend on them. The training is not a test of commitment, it is a harsh reality.
Ham radio is just a hobby.

Did you not read my last post? It's right below. The guys who built their own locomotives did NOT go up to the guys who bought theirs and say "You are not a real model steam train operator!!!"

The solution is to accept the people who are licensed, regardless of weather or not you agree with the test method.

My dad got his drivers license back in 1943 with NO test at all! They just asked him "Are you blind?" He said "No" and the response was "That will be $1 please".

I got my license in 1978 and I had to take driver training and pass 2 tests. According to some of the pro-code logic here, I should walk up to him and tell him that he is not a real driver and that I am better at driving than him. That would go over like a lead balloon.

Bravo for them. But that does not explain why some pro-coders are such snot-rags.

No competitions, just a bunch of guys who like live steam model trains. The club did not exist for that.

I forgot to mention that my dad has had a perfect driving record, not one ticket in 63 years. [yes, I did ask him] As for me, I have been known to fracture a traffic law or two. I ended up paying a hefty price for that but my record is clean now.

So, you see, lack of testing did not make my dad a bad driver while training and testing did not make me a good driver [at least not back in my teen years]. But then, I am a mechanic and I can rebuild a transmission in my back yard and you're not a real driver if you can't.

It is usually because they don't have a clue technically and base their entire level of self esteem on skill in an obsolete mode. Kicking out all the people with an IQ of less than 110 out of amateur radio would probably solve the whole problem.

It doesn't matter which. It's use indicated an inability to express ones self in an informed and educated manner. Such use is generally indicative of losing ones side of the argument.

Thank you.

BTW it seems that I have been wrong on the attribution of the observation. Someone else pointed out the another great person made the comment not Churchill. At least I can't find where Churchill may have made it.

My apologies for the error but the sentiment still stands.

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Abbie Hoffman merely wanted to levitate it." -- Paul Krassner, http://tinyurl.com/ehu3v

It's a harder to raise standards afterwards to correct the problems it caused. We can't risk dumbing things down anymore. If Mark in the Dark can get a license, we've dumbed things down too far already.

Mark in the Dark.

He can keep building his code skills to make himself a better operator.

Why does everyone only want to do the minimum and not improve. It's because they're lazy. They don't care to be good communicators, all they want is a hand-out license that doesn't require skill or knowledge. If that's what they want they should have stayed on CB.

By the way, I've never referred to any person as being a lesser or lower class than another. He is unable to differentiate between personal descriptions and regulatory use of terms such as Technicians being a lower class of LICENSE than Generals. He seems to think references of regulatory distinctions are the same as referring to persons.

As I said, human nature has a lot of negative aspects no matter what the activity. All one can do is ignore it and do their personal best.

Still my point is that when there are rules, one is obliged to follow them whether they like them or not.

rRRAP also a ham site but isn't not a ham himself accroding to the FCC
there are 80 Steinmetz's in the data base no charles p the only 2 chrales are comercail license holdes
http://wireless2.fcc.gov/UlsApp/UlsSearch/license.jsp?licKey=2213352 for chrales e

and
http://wireless2.fcc.gov/UlsApp/UlsSearch/license.jsp?licKey=2041711
for charles r
but no chrales p at all

some much for his claims to be honest and accroding to steve he therefore can't be trusted in hthe claims he was makeing to be a

3465. Charles P. Steinmetz for the clueless

At least poster has gone on a wild goose chase in searching the FCC database of amateur radio licensees in the search for Charles P. Steinmetz. The poster would do better to search cemetary records or history books.

From: http://chem.ch.huji.ac.il/~eugeniik/history/steinmetz.html

quote
Charles Proteus Steinmetz, German-American electrical engineer and inventor, was a pioneer in the field of electrical engineering, who invented a commercially successful alternating current motor. He himself considered his three most important accomplishments to be: (1) his work in the field of electromagnetism, (2) the development of a practical, simplified method of managing and calculating values for alternating current using complex numbers, and (3) his research on lightning phenomena. Steinmetz also invented the three-phase electrical circuit. His work made possible the expansion of the electric power industry in the United States. Among his many inventions is the metallic electrode arc lamp. Charles P. Steinmetz was considered the leading electrical engineer in the United States.

Originally named Karl August Rudolf Steinmetz, he was born in Breslau, Germany, the son of a railroad lithographer, Karl Heinrich Steinmetz (who was also a cripple) and his wife Caroline nee Neubert. (Breslau is in the region known as Niederschlesien, Lower Silesia, which has been part of Bohemia, Austria and Prussia. Today the city is Wroclaw, Poland.) At birth Steinmetz was afflicted with a physical deformity, hunchback. Steinmetzï¿½ early school performance was poor and at the age of eight he was having trouble with multiplication tables. However, by the time he was ten, he had made a turnaround and was one of the schoolï¿½s brightest pupils. He showed an unusual capability in mathematics, physics, and classical literature. On graduating from the gymnasium with honours, he entered the University of Breslau in 1883, where he devoured books on every subject from mathematics and economics to literature and medicine. An example of his mind and memory was his memorization of the logarithmic tables which he could manipulate mentally to solve problems in a few seconds. He was fascinated with the study of electricity, but the courses in Breslau were short on detail and completely lacking in the applied and practical. He did not see a transformer until he came to America.

There's so much junk here, I wasn't sure what the previous bit about Steinmetz was about.

I assumed it was someone using a pseudonym. Because I had doubts that the real one would have been around to get a ham license.

I see he died in 1923, so he could have got an early license, though
I recall nothing about an interest in radio. Back when I read
"The Man Who Tamed Lightning" in grade 5 or 6, I recall nothing about an interest in radio. And I think I would have taken note of such things, since I'd already decided at that point that I'd get a ham license.

Your abuse of the word "liar" is one of the things that got you banned

Took you long enough to figure it out, Markie. If you knew anything about the history of science, which you obviously don't, you would have recognized the name of the father of electrical engineering. I would have used Hiram_P_Maxim but it was already taken. Neither of them wouldn't have put up with your foolishness, either.

Not that it matters. Had I used the nym "John Q. Smith" you would still have responded with your kneejerk "id theft is acirme" or something similarly literate.

Why should I post under my real name and callsign knowing that people like you would spam and flame me with mindless dreck if I did? This is Usenet, after all. Most people here use nyms for just that reason.

By the way, were you born with the name "an old friend?" Pots and kettles, dreckmeister.

Seriously, Markie, I now realize that it would be a good thing if the FCC were to eliminate the code test so you could get your Extra. Then you could get on the air and talk to people in real time. I can't wait for you to try to crash some of the 75m nets. You think we're rough on you here? Just wait until those good ol boys on 75m get hold of you. You ain't seen nothin' yet. You'll quickly make yourself into a pariah on HF just like you have on Usenet and QRZ.

I would like to continue this discussion but since I work for a living I don't have time right now. It must be nice to be able to spend 24/7 on message boards. What's it like to be independently wealthy?

Colonel Morgan must not be aware that I can still see his message headers despite his being killfiled. His message are simply grayed out. I choose to ignore him because he is a twit.

He has called numerous people "lier", "lair" or "liar". It is quite obvious that he had no clue as to who Charles Prometheus Steinmetz was.

"Immorality: The morality of those who are having a better time." -- H. L. Mencken

"Consider that language a moment. 'Purposefully and materially supported hostilities against the United States' is in the eye of the beholder, and this administration has proven itself to be astonishingly impatient with criticism of any kind. The broad powers given to Bush by this legislation allow him to capture, indefinitely detain, and refuse a hearing to any American citizen who speaks out against Iraq or any other part of the so-called 'War on Terror.'

"If you write a letter to the editor attacking Bush, you could be deemed as purposefully and materially supporting hostilities against the United States. If you organize or join a public demonstration against Iraq, or against the administration, the same designation could befall you. One dark-comedy aspect of the legislation is that senators or House members who publicly disagree with Bush, criticize him, or organize investigations into his dealings could be placed under the same designation. In effect, Congress just gave Bush the power to lock them up." -- William Rivers Pitt

"No man in History, including JESUS CHRIST, has directly revealed to the World the SATANIC WEAPON used to enslave mankind -- INTELLECTUAL THOUGHT!!" -- Ray Karczewski repeatedly proves his words in every post he makes

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Abbie Hoffman merely wanted to levitate it." -- Paul Krassner, http://tinyurl.com/ehu3v

But they are a lesser class, Mark in the Dark. The more exams you take and pass, the harder you work, the farther up the ladder you go.

The problem you have Mark, is that you're so lazy people have to slap your silly ass off the ladder so they can climb up. You're against having good hams.

No more automatic renewals. Individuals must retest and pass all elements required for their license class.

The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

Thanks for your help.

I'd ban Mark in the Dark from posting in RRAP too.

Basically, I would ban posting privledges of everyone who's either lazy, retarded, or both. That means many of you would have to go back to CB to stay in touch with each other. If you hate CW you're banned for life.

I would let 20 wpm Extras do anything they want in RRAP. They earned it.

And nickle hams should only be allowed to post qrz.com after they've passed the code and Extra written.

QRZ is a high traffic site, and we don't want potential hams to see the riff-raff and think ham radio is like CB.

He could call it Mark in the Dark's lazy-ass ham forum for lard-ass tards. I can propably name about five RRAP'ers that would sign right up. Some of them havent got their no-code callsigns yet, but they can still visit with others like themselves on Markies board.

They can talk about hating code and other things only they can understand.

It seems you were to lazy to find out that I already passed my code class.
For your information I use the CB to talk to truckers when I go into areas Hit by hurricanes.
I was in gulf port mississippi 2 days after the hurricane hit that area last year. The year befor I was in Florida 2 days after the hurricanes hit.
You see I dry out flooded buildings ...mostly hospitals...BTW I gave My 2 meter rig to the local EOC in gulf port last year. They needed it more than I did.

So I use the CB to find out what roads are open, where the last place to get fule is etc. We haul in most of our own fuel but we have to be able to get fule for our big generators... And we also use the CB to talk to each other on the road. we have had convoys of over 20 trucks ....

I was wondering what you did for hurricanes.

Don't get to upset over Slow Code. It seems that he has a problem. Just exactly what it is I don't know but he has one. This is his way of working off his aggressions generated by those problems.

As you can see, he is unable to separate license classes from people. I referred only to the licenses not the people. He seems to think that a definition of the license is also a definition of the person. That is absolutely inane. Afterall most of us, including myself, hold a standard driver's license. It is a lower class license than a chauffer's license, CDL B, or CDL A. None of us are "insulted" by the fact the we hold a lower class license.

Disregard that idiot. If it were up to him, we'd give up all voice communication and bang code out on each other's heads like cavemen. Of course, that really sounds like a novel idea to try on S-L-O-O-O-W Code.

There were no lies uttered by me, Colonel.

1. I use Mozilla. Your message headers are grayed out, just like messages which have been read.

2. You are a twit.

That isn't correct. As I've explained to the very UnWiseman, I post

In topsy-turvy "Mark World" it may appear that anyone who knows who Charles Prometheus Steinmetz was, must be guilty of posting as that person. I submit that there are large numbers of people who have learned about Steinmetz. Any one of them might have posted those messages. I did not post them.

Not that he'll believe you, Dave. We can play Markie like a cheap fiddle any time we want to and he'll never get a clue.

What makes Markie think that Charles_P_Steinmetz is only ONE person, Respect has to be earned. That comes from a person's actions and what they say, not from the fact that they possess a particular mechanical skill (Morse in this case). So far SC had said and done very little to gain anyone's respect; quite the opposite in fact; continual spamming of this news group with bigoted off-topic garbage.

If you bothered to read my post there were NO attributions at all , just quotes from the previous message in the thread that required no attribution.
So none of them were "Bad".

No my name is not David, as it clearly said at the end of the message. I was not replying on David's behalf, merely commenting on the fact that respect is not something that comes merely with an ability or a qualification; it has to be earned by words and deeds. SC has not demonstrated anything here that would earn respect; quite the opposite in fact.

> You can't even quote a Usenet post properly. Work on that before

Critiquing SC is not difficult, his rantings make that task very easy, Even if his arguments did have any merit, his off-topic spam like postings debase the whole point of view. It just looks like very childish behaviour.

Then all of those Spanish people who name their boys "Jesus" are in REAL trouble, aren't they?

Indeed it would be pretentious if I could always remember how to spell my first name. But I'm not so stupid that I think Dave Heil is Charlie Steinmetz either. If you could read headers, you would see that the person you claim is Dave is located in the New Orleans area.

Not to have noticed that little fact, IS stupid. As you so aptly put

I guess you are a slow reader too. He already says he needs it for work. Get a grip. Get a life. Go work some slow CW. Whatever..
Just go somewhere else to blather on about CW. I'd probably smoke your lame ass at CW. Do you see me whining about your "slow code"?
Nope. This ain't the place for it.

You aren't buying, selling, or swapping anything, so why are you crossposting to rec.radio.swap? More to the point, why aren't you setting a followup to your crosspost?

There's a plethora of information on Usenet at http://snipurl.com/10buv

I would be surprised if SC even knows code, more surprised if he even had a rig up and running.
After all, why would someone that can do 20+wpm spend there time here flameing everyone?
Besides, none of the Hams I know would never insult anyone new to ham radio.
And they would not cross post like this......

CW is not a true ham, he has no idea what being a ham means...

Which ones, praytell? Posting to a newsgroup I don't read? I know where Actually I was most likely the only ham on the road that night. Even if I wasn't the truck drivers know the road since they drive it every day where as very few hams do so. I generally see 100-200 CB equipped trucks and cars for each ham equipped truck/car. You tell me which service is better for road conditions?

Again, the pro-coders only equate code speed with being a good operator. Amateur radio has only a single dimension for them - CW on HF. Their attitude is bankrupting amateur radio.

be fair they equate Code and some even promote code acuratcy the rest you got spot on and since SC has never said slpooy fast is ok we Then why don't they?

>appear to want to change the requirements with no knowledge, experience, or >understanding of the requirements.

Nonsense. Pro-coders do NOT have some "lock" on What The Requirements Should Be. They never did, despite all the pro-code propaganda drilled into your respective psyches.

It should be quite obvious that every other radio service has either given up on using morse code for communications or never considered it in the first place. Manual radio-telegraphy has only a slight advantage in communications with other amateurs using radiotelegraphy who do not speak English.

Note: Nowhere in the "requirements" (Title 47 C.F.R. Part 97 for US radio amateurs) is it mandatory for US amateurs to communicate with foreigners. NB: Non-English speakers using International Morse Code are, essentially, required to learn parts of English to understand the English alphabet (difficult if their native language is syllabic or has a different alphabet).

The ITU-R "requirements" (Radio Regulations) no longer "require" administrations to test ALL their amateurs for any license having below-30-MHz privileges. The major (in population) nation administrations have dropped their morse code testing or substitute other tests in lieu of morse code. Since some of those nations do not have English as a primary language, those will have some future difficulty using that (supposed "universal language" of morse code) for communications with USA radio amateurs.

>In addition, most of us have experienced >people who said they could not learn code but upon questioning find that >they did not use a good training method and did not train correctly.

More overtly biased opinion...written AS IF morse code were an "absolute requirement" when it is merely an old regulatory hanger-on in USA amateur federal rules.

The REGULATION (not "the requirement") for US radio amateurs is simply a man-made regulation which can be un-man-made. It is not some God-given commandment of radio. Indeed, all other US radio services operating below 30 MHz do NOT use morse code radiotelegraphy. Why should radio amateurs be held elevated to some special significance?

Except for the older military-trained radiotelegraphers in US amateur radio, all the tales told (by so-called successful pro-coders) have them doing basic learning then trying out on the amateur radio bands for greater skill in radiotelegraphy.

The basic fallacy of pro-coder thinking is that "all" have some innate ability to learn morse code. That has been disproven as far back as World War II when the US military began screening new recruits for the aptitude to learn morse code. That fallacy has been disproven by countless other tales of individuals who tried the so-called "good training methods" and tried to "train correctly" (even under strict supervision).

>Yet >when they decided they were tired of waiting did learn it and got their >upgrade.

The "upgrade requirements" were lobbied for to emphasize morse code radiotelegraphy skill. That is history. It would have been difficult to overcome the lobbying of the ARRL towards such "upgrades through morsemanship." Yet there has been efforts by concerned radio amateurs (who have been tested to the maximum telegraphic radtes) to eliminate the morse code test entire. That is not some strict USA effort since the ITU did change international amateur Radio Regulations in 2003...under pressure from the IARU. Your sentence is written with an obvious pro-coder bias.

>Then finding out how useful it was in ham pursuits were glad that >they had done it.

Another fallacy and another pro-coder bias statement. It is obvious that many, many US radio amateurs were NOT favorites of morse radiotelegraphy and never used it after they received their first license.

>So far of each of the reasons that people put forth as to why they can't >learn it have been disproven by the example of other people with the same >problem having gone ahead and done it.

Yet another fallacy and a repetition of the earlier fallacy that all US human beings are somehow able to learn morse code...provided they have some (mysterious) "attitude" adjustment in favor of radiotelegraphy as an "absolute" requirement in radio?

>The 5wpm level is obtainable >although some of the problem do make faster speeds a problem (constant >tinnitus may be a severe problem at 20 wpm for example).

Then they should use "flashing lights or vibrating pads."

The reduction to 5 WPM equivalent word rate was an attempt of the FCC to satisfy both the pro-morse-code-test citizens and the (ever-growing) NO-code-test advocates. It satisfied neither.

>My ex-OM had 70%
>hearing loss in both ears and severe tinnitus. He passed the 5wpm.

It would seem that one of you (perhaps both) at lost the ability to understand the "I do" at your marriage ceremony?

Did your "EX" pass using flashing lights or vibrating pads?

>I know people with dyslexia who have passed.

I knew people with terminal cancer who "passed." [just not the code test]

I "know people" ranging from PhD aerospace gurus to never-make-star-quality bimbo actresses and thousands of shades of personal abilities in between. I know few dyslexics.

>The blind have passed.

I am acquainted with several blind people through the Braille Institute. None of them had any desire to learn morse code. They were thankful enough to be able to get around by themselves and be reasonably productive in life.

>Even the deaf have passed using flashing lights or vibrating pads.

In the year that Ham Radio magazine sold out to CQ, I interviewed 11 licensed radio amateurs preparing an article for that magazine. ALL of them passed their code tests for amateur radio licenses when they could still hear.
None of them "passed using flashing lights or vibrating pads." All were male. One was a practicing dentist.

>Do you have competitions in your model railroading activity? If you enter >that competition, you all have to follow the published rules with no >exceptions.

Part 97, Title 47 C.F.R. does NOT manadate that US radio amateurs engage in "competition" radio activity.
Federal law (Communications Act of 1934 plus the Telecommunications Act of 1996) requires ALL US radio amateurs to follow its regulations. That is NO contest nor a "competition" activity. It is merely the LAW.

As with all US federal agencies, the FCC does accept citizen commentary to them regarding radio regulations.
The FCC responds to Petitions submitted by US citizens in regards to those radio regulations. [however, not with blinding speeds of decision in regards to amateur radio] Nowhere does the FCC discriminate between those are already licensed in amateur radio versus those not licensed. FCC does not treat the group of already-licensed as some kind of fraternal order of the already-licensed to be listened to over and above all other interested citizens.

The morse code test (for under-30-MHz operating privileges) affects the non-licensed US citizens. It does NOT affect those already legally licensed as radio amateurs...except in the limited conditions of certain already-licensed Technician classes. That code test does NOT legally affect ANY other already-licensed US radio amateur. If they say it does then they have some emotional disturbance (not a legal problem nor a regulatory problem).

I know a few model railroaders. As far as I know none are into "competitions" concerning their hobby. They do it for the fun of model railroading. As a hobby, not as a substitute for life...nor advancing the state of the art in rail transport.

I know many more model builders and model aircraft flyers. [I have been both] The Academy of Model Aeronautics (AMA) is a membership organization (about a quarter million members in the USA) with a large rule set to follow in flying model aircraft. That rule set is for both competition flying and for safety; there is special liability insurance for members of the AMA in regards to that flying activity. There is no absolute requirement to be an AMA member to enjoy model airplane flying nor is there some federal test one must take to be one. It is a hobby...yet the AMA has successfully petitioned for and gotten many radio channels expressly for model remote control. No code test nor license was required. You may read about it in Part 95, Title 47 C.F.R. under Radio Control Radio Service.

"Park flyers" are free to fly models, even to radio-control them, all without being licensed by the FCC or as a member of the Academy of Model Aeronautics. Add to that the R-C cars and boats. There is a very large model hobby industry existing in the USA to provide for such hobbyists. From the size of that industry the number of modelers would easily equal the number of USA radio amateurs...if not exceeding it.

Your comments in regards to "competitiveness" do not apply to US citizens seeking to change existing radio regulations in the USA, any radio service.

I don't remember,
cutting wood for winter, foraging the woods for berries, turning the crank on a model T, building a spear to kill a deer, washing my clothes in the river, making candles to light the night.
And I do appreciate that I don't have to do these things anymore.

I have helped cut wood for winter heating. I have also foraged for berries, actually Granny knew where to look and took me along to help pick berries. I have never hand cranked a model T, but have watched others do it (was tied up with winter wood cutting, the "T" drove a belt with a rear axle wheel to drive a large circular saw) I never did any of the other things listed, but if Granny were still here, I'd bet she has and could describe the process. Except the spear hunting, that was before Grannys time and on the other side of the family.

dear friend....

this is to inform about the story that i lost everything

i was conducting some groups in a very good and perfect condition

prince_of_kids

beauty_kid13

lovely_pop13

i had more than 5000 members

in this 5000 adresses i just selected some of them

those who found that thet they love boys of age 10-15

if you love to see boyz in their natural beauty

it made just guess work from your EmailID

two weeks before somebody brute hacked my passwords

(yahoo password server uses an old technology, anybody can get password reset ,of any yahoo email ID foolig by sending

a fake request)

as a result i am not able to get back in and continue with moderating these groups

with the help of yahoo i try to retrieve some of your mail IDs

i am going to start one website

free nembership for all my old members forward this message to your friends who has the same taste..

hope you will enjoy it

copy and paste the below typed address in the address bar and click go...

http://wvw.awardspace.biz/

and one more thing important,dont delete this message

if problem occure in future to access the site please report to it to any of the following mail IDs

you may be right But honestly I don't think so I beleive that SC is a older hams who moved to some retirement village, did not read the fine print, and so can't go on the air anymore and having put his saving in it is just plain screwed andf unable to move and not driving much can't go HF mobile even

and he come on here and takes it out on us

The late Dick Carrol/W0EX prided himself on being able to send code so poorly that even a computer code reader couldn't copy him. This was in order to prevent unworthy No-Code Technicians from eavesdropping on him.

BTW, all the other Pro-Code Extras were good with it, coming up with cool, old-timey sounding excuses for such bad behavoir. "Banana Boat Swing" and "unique fist" were heard. A ham needn't try to produce CW that meets the Morse Code specification for dots, dashes, inter-dot/dash spacing, inter-character spacing, and inter-word spacing.

Ham radio is better. With CB you can only go out about fifteen miles, but with ham you can get road conditions three states away. Of course, with all the no-codes and nickle amateurs on ham radio these days the road reports aren't as good as they used to be.

Improving your skills doesn't make you a better operator? Sheeesh.

You can still have your microphone, but you should have to pass a code test before you're allowed to use it. I like 5 WPM for Tech, 13 for General, and 20wpm for Extra, but then, I'm not lazy.

That was plain stupid. There's no need to try to send deliberately bad code. Only the finest operators can send code well enough with a hand key that a computer can copy it anyway. Only exceptionally good operators can send well enough with a bug that a computer can copy it. Only very good operators can send well enough with paddles that computers can copy it.
Basically a computer is good at copying computer generated code.

The "Banana Boat Swing" and "unique fist" existed long, long before computers came along. These were simply operators with poor sending skills.
And they are a pain in the ear and brain to copy. I usually move on rather than respond to them.

More likely a knee jerk reaction to the very few but very vocal ones who try to come in and act like they know all there is to know about radio when the "ink isn't even dry on their license". It's unfortunate that the experienced hams don't have the discipline to withstand this nonsense without such knee-jerk reactions.

When a new licensee (the level of license is irrelevant) tells me that you can't work DX without an amplifier, I just tell him about the countries I worked with my 100 watt radio and relatively low mount G5RV. But some hams turn bitter instead when a newbie insists that he is right and they are wrong.

If this is for real, you are plain nuts.

6.950 is not an ISM/HiFER allocation in the US. Even a Canda ISM s
6.765-6.795.

Canadian RSS-210 rules, Section 6.2.2 (e) permit operation in the same band but at slightly higher field strength, 15.5 mV/m at 30 m. Their frequency stability requirements are similar. Canada also has another license-free HF band not available in the USA; 6,765 - 6,795 kHz. Field strength and frequency limits are the same as those for 13,553 -13,567 kHz.

No such "propaganda", Len.

Why is that important to amateur radio policy, Len? Amateurs do use Morse Code - extensively.

Actually, Morse Code has a lot of advantages.

That's true. But one of the Basis and Purposes of the Amateur Radio Service is international good will. Communicating with "foreigners" is one way to do that.

Yep. That changed almost 3-1/2 years ago. Yet FCC has not acted upon it.

How do you know?

Have China, India and the countries making up the former Soviet Union changed their Morse Code test policy? How about Japan?

Seems to me that the changes have mostly occurred in Western Europe, the British Commonwealth, and a few South American countries.

It's a fact that at least some people use poorly-designed training methods.

That's true. In fact, all radio license requirements are man-made.

Why is that so important? Do you think radio amateurs should not use it either?

It's not about 'special significance".

Radio amateurs do use Morse Code, so it makes sense to test for knowledge of it.

What's wrong with that?

There are obviously those who cannot learn it - just as there are those who cannot learn to speak, or read and write, or who cannot pass the written tests.

Nope.

The military aptitude testing was done to find those who could learn the fastest and reach the highest levels of skill in the least time.
The requirements for military radio telegraphers were much higher than for amateurs, and the military could not afford lots of time to train them.

btw, the existence of such aptitude testing proves that the US military needed large numbers of Morse Code skilled radio operators during WW2.

Who lobbied for those requirements, Len?

When did they lobby for the requirements?

The fact is that in all the history of US amateur radio licensing, every increase in Morse Code testing has been accompanied by an increase in written test requirements. So the emphasis has always been balanced between written testing and Morse Code testing.

Since 1990 it has not been necessary for anyone with a doctor's note seeking an FCC-issued amateur license to go beyond the basic 5 wpm test. Since 2000 it has not been necessary for anyone seeking an FCC-issued amateur license to go beyond the basic 5 wpm test.

The FCC accepts comments from everyone - not just citizens.
"Foreigners" and groups/corporations are welcome to comment as well.

How much consideration the comments get is another matter.

It affects them in many ways. If amateur radio should change for the worse because of changes in license requirements, those who are already licensed would be affected.

For example, if someone wanted to change the real estate zoning in your neighborhood,
that change would not "legally affect" you or your neighbors, unless you wanted to build on your property. Your houses would not change.

> If
> they say it does then they have some emotional disturbance

Not true. If amateur radio is made worse by rules changes, all involved are affected. You, who are not involved, are unaffected.

If someone wanted to change the real estate zoning in your neighborhood,
that change would not "legally affect" you or your neighbors, unless you wanted to build on your property. Your houses would not change.
Would you say that those who resisted such a zoning change have an "emotional disturbance"?

Model railroading does not involve any sort of licensing, nor use of the radio spectrum. What one model railroader does with his/her layout does not directly affect what other model railroaders can do with theirs.

Amateur radio isn't like that. We use a shared and limited resource - the radio spectrum.

A more valid analogy would be something like operating motor vehicles for noncommercial purposes, where the medium (the roads) are shared with many others.

How many channels? How much total spectrum? How much of it is below 30 MHz?

IIRC, the total amount of spectrum set aside for model control is less than the narrowest amateur band above 30 MHz.

btw, there has been no Morse Code test requirement in the US for use of all the amateur bands above 30 MHz.

> No code test nor license was required. You may

They got a few channels in a few narrow slices of VHF/UHF. They are allowed to use only very low power, with almost all their communications limited to line-of-sight.

Amateur radio is very different.

Yet all they need is a small assortment of VHF/UHF channels, low power, small antennas and line-of-sight radio.

Is that what you think amateur radio should be?

It should be remembered that one of the primary reasons model aircraft enthusiasts got channels in the ~70 MHz range was the fact that their 27 MHz allocation became unusable due to being effectively taken over by illegal cb operation.

FCC does not limit comments to only US citizens.

And when FCC recently asked for comments on the Morse Code test issue, the majority of those commenting were against the complete elimination of the Morse Code test. The ratio was approximately 55% in favor of at least some Morse Code testing.

I gather a lot of newsservers don't recognize cancel messages at this point, because individuals were using it for malicious reasons. At the very least, they need the cancel message to come from a known source, such as a group dealing with pyramid schemes to make money.

And of course, if a newsserver doesn't recognize cancel messages,
the messages don't cancel.

If you don't know what you are doing, then you shouldn't be doing it.
It's my understanding that there is no newsgroup for control messages, they simply propogate or not. It's been a while since I read up on such messages.

The way to deal with the problem is to deal with the problem posters ISPs. Because otherwise it will just take the war to another level.
It won't stop with the junk posts, and it won't stop with the junk posts spreading over an increasingly wider spread of newsgroups, it will just mean that if it works, then the junk posters may turn around and start cancelling legit posts.

Dee, the "ink on my license" has been "dry" for 50 years.

The mimeograph "ink" on my Army assignment has been "dry"
for 53 years.

The "ink" on my first aerospace hiring has also been "dry"
for 50 years.

In a half century of being radio-active, I've continually been learning, working, experimenting, trying, doing. I DO know a fair amount of things about radio and electronics but there is always something new coming up all the time.

OH! You mean AMATEUR RADIO "license?" Of course. Amateur

Riiiight...those coming into ham radio from any other kind

Gosh, I "worked countries" with nothing less than 1 KW output

Of course, for 24/7 ops on HF crossing the Pacific there was 40 KW PEP into a rhombic... :-)

Area man charged with bestiality
Tuesday, October 24, 2006
(Story borrowed for "educational" purposes of course....)

A 44-year-old Saginaw man remains jailed today on charges of bestiality after he was seen engaged in sexual acts with a dead dog, Michigan State Police troopers said.

Ronald Kuch was arrested after police searched the area of Midland and Carter roads Friday for a man who ran away from a Bay County Animal Control officer. The entire incident was within view of a nearby day care center. At his arraignment on Monday, Kuch demanded a preliminary examination in Bay County District Court. District Judge Craig Alston ordered him to remain jailed in lieu of $500,000 bond pending a hearing on the evidence Nov. 6.Kuch is charged with crimes against nature and assaulting a law enforcement officer.

Troopers said a woman from the day care center called for animal control because there was a dead dog near the property that had been hit by a car several days earlier.Before officers could arrive, the man showed up and began engaging in sexual acts with the dog, police said. The animal control officer also reported seeing Kuch involved in the sex act and as he approached him, Kuch shoved him away and ran off.State troopers searched the area and found the man hiding in the attic of a nearby house.

Officers determined that the house belonged to the man's girlfriend and later learned that the dog, a black Labrador retriever, also belonged to the girlfriend. The dog had been dead for four or five days.

The official charge of crimes against nature carries a maximum penalty of 15 years in prison. If the person is a repeat offender, the maximum is life in prison.

Lemme guess...our "hero" above was one of the old checkin's to the militia net that used to meet on 3.860 years ago..? GLEEEEEPP!!

A second back of the envelope calculation says you are way over the legal field strength in this case too. As I said before, you can calculate the power it takes for an isotropic radiator to produce a field strength of 100E-6 volts/meter at a distance of of three meters as follows:

1. The area of a sphere of radius r is 4*Pi*r^2. An isotropic radiator emitting P watts at the center of the sphere will produce a power density of Pd = P / (4*Pi*r^2) on its surface.

2. The power density is related to the electric field and the impedance of free space (120*Pi) by the formula Pd = e^2 / (120*Pi).

3. Solving (1) and (2) for the power, P, you come up with P = (er)^2 / 30.

So, for an "e" of 100E-6 and an "r" of 3, P = 0.01732 watts, or roughly seventeen milliwatts.

Since antennas are not isotropic, the power must be reduced even further so that the electric field will not exceed the legal limit in the direction of highest antenna gain.

This calculation ignores line losses and final amplifier inefficiencies, but there's no way you can convince me that you can take a 50 watt transmitter and manage to lose so much power that you have seventeen milliwatts or less being radiated.

All my DeVry Correspondence School instincts once again tell me that you are seriously in violation of the law. Other DeVry grads at the FCC will probably agree, as will our distinguished but indisposed alumnus, AB8MQ, the only man to have discovered negative VSWR.

Correction: I accidentally took the square root instead of squaring the product of e*r. The correct value should be 0.003 microwatts for an isotropic radiator to produce a 100 microvolt/meter field at three meters! That's three thousandths of a microwatt, Todd.

Now tell me that 50 to 100 watts isn't way too much power ...

I've tried CWGet and it doesn't copy the signals that I want to copy. It still is subject to problems with QRN, QRM, QSB, and less than perfect fists. It can't copy any of the signals distorted by aurora. So while it is the best of the available programs, it still falls far short of a good human operator. And I'm speaking from experience with the program. It's not up to the task that I want it to do.

Already tried it. As I said while it is the best that is available, it is still far below the capabilities of a human operator. I've tried it under a wide range of conditions and CWGet still needs a pretty good signal to function.

indeed it is and that is the fact the FCC will not be impressed by any calualtiononly by the result that you CAN't understand that FACT is why you show got cancelled

Uhhhhh Dee, your 100 watt radio has an amplifier in it as do all modern transceivers. I have, in the past, worked DX using just an oscillator but I personally don't know of anyone who doesn't use an amplifier nowadays.

RFID excitation frequency?
100uV at 3M, ~9'?

Get real, my LOs leak that much.

Your 50W to 100W is so illegal you are plain silly.

That ramps down to less then 1uV at 100M, which is way below the noise floor at an location I am familiar with.

I see that you are a general class:
"Callsign: N9OGL Class: General Codes: HAI USA
Name: TODD E DAxxxxxxx
Effective: 24 Jan 2002 Expires: 11 Feb 2012

Any general class ham is so clueless as to be a clear luser.

I am only sorry I wasted time and bandwidth reading your posts.

100uV at 3M, that is too sad to even be funny.

Congratulations, you are the 2nd or 3rd person I have killfiled.
You have worked very hard to earn this coveted position.

I wanted a nickname that would help me connect with no-code hams and nickle upgrades on usenet.

I had two really good nicks in mind, but I couldn't decide which one use, so I flipped a coin. It was either going to be 'Slow Code' or 'Hey Stupid'.

I'll probably have to switch to 'Hey Stupid' after code goes away.

More likely a knee jerk reaction to the very few but very vocal ones who try to come in and act like they know all there is to know about radio when the "ink isn't even dry on their license". It's unfortunate that the experienced hams don't have the discipline to withstand this nonsense without such knee-jerk reactions.

When a new licensee (the level of license is irrelevant) tells me that you can't work DX without an amplifier, I just tell him about the countries I worked with my 100 watt radio and relatively low mount G5RV. But some hams turn bitter instead when a newbie insists that he is right and they are wrong.

Hi Harold,
My point is, times change, peoples change, and if you want to cut wood, pick berries, crank a model T, or spear hunt,
Have at it, but your not out telling everybody they need to.

Just like pro-Mexican immigration Neo-Kommies, their last argument of refuge is the race card.

Translation - they don't have an argument.

That is correct. That is because you are a tech and cannot work HF at all!

Like Dee, I've worked stations worldwide with "just" 100 watts and a G5RV and you could too, if you'd but learn a paltry 5wpm code speed.

Wrong, Mark.

A successful conviction for 28.355/750.158; Sodomy or "crime against nature" in Michigan requires penetration (People v. Carrier, 74 Mich App 161) though emission need not be proved. Punishment is a felony with a term in prison of not more than 15 years. If a person is labelled a "sexually delinquent person" then the state may punish that person by imprisonment in the state prison for an interminate term, the maximum of which shall be imprisonment for life.

Michigan

* Statute: 750.158, Crime Against Nature. Unconstitutional under Lawrence v. Texas.

* Penalty: 15 years

* Classification: Felony

* Restrictions: None

Invalidated by local trial court, Michigan Org. for Hum. Rts. v. Kelley, No. 88-815820 CZ (Mich. Cir. Ct. Wayne Cnty. July 9, 1990), The State has not appealed. In late 1992, there was a decision of the Michigan Court of Appeals to uphold the statute, which has effect statewide effectively reversing MOHR v. Kelly. See People v. Brashier, 496 N. W.2d 385.

Unrelated to my comments.

No one has said all CW signals are good. If they were always good, CWGet would always work, which it doesn't. The ones who tout the software solution are those who wish that it would always work.

In addition, I have repeatedly stated that each and every mode has its advantages and disadvantages. The extremists on each side don't want to hear that.

Oh, really????
How about THIS one? (QRZ) and a newstory from England?

Quote
Morse code used in rescue!

London, 20 October/GNN/ -- MARITIME AND COASTGUARD AGENCY News Release (Press Notice: 368_06) issued by The Government News Network on 20 October 2006

Yesterday afternoon just after 5.30pm Hayling Island Coastguard team member, Steve Mann, witnessed what he thought was a SOS message flashed by torchlight towards the Control Tower at Hayling Island Sailing Club. Steve responded to the SOS message by switching the lights on and off in the Control Tower.

The casualty was identified and was indeed using Morse code as he had recently transferred all of his safety equipment from his 28ft fishing vessel onto a newly acquired boat. He was running this vessel from Emsworth to Thorneham Marina, a distance of about 4 miles, when he ran aground and started to take on water. Steve Mann then alerted Solent Coastguard Marine Rescue Coordination Centre who requested the launch of the RNLI inshore and D-class lifeboats from Hayling island to the casualty who was transferred to Hayling Island Lifeboat Station, where he was checked over by a crewman who is also a paramedic. His vessel was towed back to Sparks Marina by the inshore lifeboat.

Steve Mann said afterwards, "I was absolutely amazed to see the flashed SOS message. This man was caught out on the one occasion he went to sea with absolutely no safety equipment. Even without radio communication going to sea without even a portable flare is extremely dangerous and could cost you your life."

I would bet that the person flashing SOS knows little, or no morse code other than SOS.

This, as an argument for hams using CW, is kind of like "mayday" being an argument for hams being conversant in French.

If code is supposed to keep the Rif Raf out of Ham Radio.

How did you get in ?

Scotty W7PSK

I will sign with my callsign Unlike SC.

Has it occurred to anyone else that Slow Code may actually be a no-coder whose goal it is to make everyone hate pro-coders? He may even be a CBer with no ham license at all.

As is welfare fraud.

As is child molestation.

As is elder abuse.

As is tax evasion.

As is representing oneself as a federal officer.

As are a list of other "crimes against humanity and nature" that you've participated in or promoted, yet you don't let the illegality of those infractions slow YOU down, Porkie.

What is the point, indeed.

Child molestation is a crime...Didn't slow YOU down.

Elder abuse is a crime...Doesn't slow YOU down.

Tax evasion is a crime...Doesn't slow YOU down.

Welfare cheating is a crime...Doesn't slow YOU down.

Promoting one's self as a federal officer is a crime...Didn't slow want things kept without change.

You've been Conditioned, Miccolis. Conditioned thinking stuck there by the ARRL for decades...since before you were able to read...

Amateur radio POLICY in regards to LICENSE TEST requirements, Miccolis. License TEST requirements.

The FCC does NOT mandate exclusive use of radiotelegraphy
by US radio amateurs. All allocated modes are OPTIONAL to use. If all allocated modes are OPTIONAL to use, why continue a specific pass-fail TEST in ONE MODE?

["boilerplate" political insert into the Basis & Purpose]

So, exactly WHAT is this so-called "good will?" Has it stopped wars and armed conflict anywhere in the world?
[No] Has it ended world hunger or even alleviated it?
[No] Does this "good will" do ANYTHING?

When was the last time the AMATEUR bands were used to save a life using radiotelegraphy?

I would think saving a life would be the BEST good will possible.

It SHOULD be obvious to all but the conditioned-thinking Believer. :-)

It should be obvious that the so-called "advantages" of morse code radiotelegraphy are so few...ergo, it isn't worth having a license TEST for it. Especially since the FCC hasn't mandated exclusivity for morse code radio-telegraphy for years.

>> Why should radio amateurs be held elevated to some >> special significance?
>
>It's not about 'special significance".

Yes, it is. :-)

See "VANITY" call signs...see the old "Extra" requirements for 20 WPM code tests. See all the "gotta upgrade!"
agit-prop from ARRL where morsemanship is promoted way over all other modes.

Just as there are some in here who cannot tell time, cannot understand that a federal court decision in the early 1970s TOOK AWAY the claimed "firsts" of ENIAC.

>The military aptitude testing was done to find those who could learn
>the fastest and reach the highest levels of skill in the least time.

You "KNOW" this by first-hand experience, Jimmie? :-)

No, you could NOT know any of that. In fact, I was the one who FIRST mentioned it in here. :-)

I took one of those morse aptitude tests, along with about a dozen other aptitude tests, back in 1952. A few hundreds of thousands other recruits did the same in the 1950s. You NEVER did that.

>The requirements for military radio telegraphers were much higher than >for amateurs, and the military could not afford lots of time to train >them.

The "requirements for military radio telegraphers [sic]" topped out at 20 WPM for Army Field Radio MOS, Jimmie.

Same rate as amateur extras prior to 2000. Sunnuvagun!

The US Army took only 8 weeks to "train" soldiers in basic training to kill the enemy (in several ways) and some other RUDIMENTARY skills of survival. Took a LOT LONGER to train soldiers on some specialty.

You never did either one...

>btw, the existence of such aptitude testing proves that the US military >needed large numbers of Morse Code skilled radio operators during WW2.

Jimmie, you just crapped. :-) All you have for "proof" of that is what the ARRL has written. Jaysus, what a fine example of Conditioned Thinking! ["brainwashing"]

World War II ended 61 years ago. [the Korean War has never ended...it is in a state of truce begun 53 years ago] All you "Know" about military anything is what you've READ about and probably tinkered with some left-over radio surplus, no doubt second- or third-hand. :-)

>> The "upgrade requirements" were lobbied for to emphasize >> morse code radiotelegraphy skill. That is history.
>Who lobbied for those requirements, Len?

ARRL, of course. :-)

As they've bragged to anyone who can read, "they know what is best for amateur radio!" :-)

>> As with all US federal agencies, the FCC does accept

No kidding?!? :-)

Then explain the prevailing attitude in here (and you are one of them) about "only" licensed amateurs "should" comment about amateur radio regulations? :-)

Why "worse," Jimmie? Afraid you won't have any new coders to play with? :-)

Would you suffer Great Emotional Harm if the code test went away? WHY? You ALREADY have YOUR amateur extra class.

Here's a newsflash: The FCC is NOT chartered by law to serve up emotional sustenance to the already-licensed.
Go starve, you poor thing...

>Not true. If amateur radio is made worse by rules changes, all involved >are affected. You, who are not involved, are unaffected.

"Not involved?" :-) You are using that in the context of 'involvement' meaning 'licensed.' You've just gone against what you previously wrote. :-)

>Amateur radio isn't like that. We use a shared and limited resource -
>the radio spectrum.

So does CB. So does R-C. So does GMRS. So does GPS.
So does Maritime Radio Service. So does GMDSS. So does Aviation Radio Service. So does Media [radio broadcasting]. So does the entire PLMRS...which includes all the public safety radio services, railroad radio service, business radio, paging services. So does cellular telephony. So does the US government and US military.

Don't get off on your "amateurs are conservators of the EM spectrum" kick you've done before. The FCC regulates US civil radio and the NTIA does it for the US government.
Amateurs have to take what they can get, just like every other radio service.

>A more valid analogy would be something like operating motor vehicles
>for noncommercial purposes, where the medium (the roads) are shared

Don't play in that road, Jimmie, you will get run over by CB and Cell Phones and inundated by Broadcasting! :-)

Wah, wah, wah...poor Jimmie has had days to find out for himself...and CAN'T.

The AMA lobbied for and got 80 channels (20 KHz each bandwidth) for a HOBBY pursuit. The modelers don't run around saying they invented airplanes or cars or boats nor are they claiming to be either advancing the state of the art (of airplanes or cars or boats) of providing for any "pool" of trained car, boat, or airplane drivers! They aren't making rude noises about anyone calling their hobby a HOBBY...yet the stuffed-full-of-themselves hams get all angry and flustered about being called HOBBYISTS IN RADIO (which is what they really are).

>than the narrowest amateur band above 30 MHz.

Wah, wha, waaaa...like Jimmie spends a lot of time ABOVE
30 MHz? HAAAAA!

Like the total amount of spectrum on 60m is "big?"

Like 80 x 20 KHz isn't 1.6 MHz? For a NON-communications radio service?

>btw, there has been no Morse Code test requirement in the US for use of >all the amateur bands above 30 MHz.

No shit, sherlock? :-) It's never bothered me on OTHER radio services, including the Department of Defense, for frequencies BELOW 30 MHz...or ABOVE 30 MHz. :-)

Amateurs seem to get wet panties if someone threatens to take away their beloved code TEST, the ones they had to take. Why is that?

Tsk, you didn't read the applicable part of Part 95, did you? :-)

The 72 to 76 MHz region is in VHF, not UHF.

Do you consider 1.6 MHz of spectrum at VHF "narrow slices?" :-) Hey, you are the one championing those little teeny slices that "CW" needs. :-)

> They are

Radio Control Radio Service was NOT created for COMMUNICATIONS. It is for the radio control of models. Hello? It ain't about "communications" but about CONTROL BY RADIO.

0.75 Watts maximum RF power output won't burn up the ionosphere, but that amount of power is GOOD for interplanetary DX, sweetums. Line of sight.
To the moon. To Mars. To Venus. To comets. To so many comm sats in equatorial orbit that all those slots are filled.

>Yet all they need is a small assortment of VHF/UHF channels, low power, >small antennas and line-of-sight radio.

Hello? 80 Channels at 20 KHz each. In VHF, not UHF.

NASA thinks 0.75 W RF power output to be adequate for interplanetary DX.

A quarter wave whip at 73 MHz is only 3 1/4" long.

How big would it be at 40m? Do you equate size with performance? Or is that some kind of "male" thing? :-)

>Is that what you think amateur radio should be?

Did I say that? Sorry, I've never even HINTED at, much less IMPLIED that ham radio "should be like that."

You CRAPPED again, Jimmie.

By the way, amateur radio is allowed to use some band space for control-by-radio. Really! :-)

>It should be remembered that one of the primary reasons model aircraft >enthusiasts got channels in the ~70 MHz range was the fact that their >27 MHz allocation became unusable due to being effectively taken over >by illegal cb operation.

BULLSHIT on the "illegal CB," Jimmie. You crapped again.

There were only SIX channels available in the original CB Class C allocation back in 1958. SIX isn't even close to enough for LEGAL operation in one location of flying, boating, or driving. THAT is why the AMA lobbied for, and got the EIGHTY 72 to 75 MHz channels.

80 channels is enough for the most crowded weekend happening at Apollo Field in the San Fernando Valley dam recreation area. [big area, even a paved runway for Giant Scale aircraft] No problem.

>And when FCC recently asked for comments on the Morse Code test issue, >the majority of those commenting were against the complete >elimination of the Morse Code test. The ratio was approximately 55% in >favor of at least some Morse Code testing.

Oh, oh, Jimmie CRAPPED again! Just WHO does he think came up with the statistics? ME sweetums. I read - and saved (on CD now) - each and every Comment on FCC 05-235. Further, I tried to keep folks in this newsgroup appraised of the progress. BEFORE pro-coder Joe Speroni could cook his own stats to make it LOOK like pro-coders "won."

I have to say I wouldn't do that again with all the heckling and cat-calling by the pro-coders in here. You were one of those, you poor dear. You were UPSET by the EARLY RETIRNS showing a decided favor for ELIMINATION of the code test.

It's all in Google archives, sweetums. Go look for yourself.
See your own heckling and cat-calling in there.

You don't like that? Tough shit. Now go play with your code key, Jimmie. Stay out of the radio spectrum highway where so many radio users hang out that you might get hurt. Stay in your little radiotelegraph spectrum slivers and pretend you are the bestest coder what am, "pioneering the airwaves" with your dots and dashes. Dream on, the REAL pioneering was done by others a half century before you got your first license.

If some nasty no-coder makes you sweat, just complain to Big Brother in Newington. Or write nastygrams to the IEEE (where you aren't a member) about someone "not following the IEEE rules of conduct!" :-)

well Honestlly Len allow me an R/C flyer to correct you at some shows their are problem with not being near enough frqs at some shows it is smaller scalle planes show that atract more fliers that have a problem was even promted some developement of 2/4 gig units

Jimmie will NEVER admit to using any pseudonyms. :-)

Jimmie is a proud amateur "serving his country in other ways" such as playing with his radio hobby, spreading "international good will" by working DX on HF with CW. :-)

>> "Slow Code" could be Brian Burke, N0IMD,

Not in Miccolis' petty prissy manner of "always being correct."
[i.e., thinking as Miccolis thinks...all else is "wrong"]

Miccolis already tried at least one pseudonym. That pesudo STOPPED when confronted. [that's in the Google archives]
But, but, but...Miccolis (who never swears) swears "it wasn't him!" AS IF. :-)

>Ditto
>Robesin, Coslo, Bruce, Dan, Larry Roll, or anyone else who "appears" to

Maybe it is Val Germann, frustrated that he can't get his (code speed) up? :-)

Could even be KH2D after starting the Alzheimer's route...who knows?

Maybe it is Lamont Cranston? "Who knows what evil lurks in the hearts of No-Coders?" :-)

There's lots of fictitious BOYS in here fearing evil No-Coders.

Most of them use pseudonyms. No guts. No courage. No brains.

They hide behind their BFO-enabled beeping, afraid to stray beyond the anonymity of their monotonic dots and dashes...and dreams of glory and honor via morsemanship..."serving their country in 'other' ways." :-)

in pint of fact in the USA roughly hunderd years ago Men my age and older would marry have sex with and cause to die in child birth
"children" younger than Pages Foley has chated with about sex

Greek society esp Athen expected men to have sex for breeding with there wifves and sex for fun with teen boys who were to tutored is various thing and sponsered for soctiey postion under the control of the sexaul patron (although acutal anal sex was rare in that society

Military Imposter Robeson is one sick puppy. We can't expect him to improve his demeanor by himself. He is personally angry and frustrated, searching for something, anything in regards to personal "glory" via some kind of rank.

Those olde-tymers (who fear Evil No-Coders) are into the stubbornness of middle age. They want things THEIR way and everyone else can go to hell. QED.

The "Elian" affair is NOT about amateur radio policy.

There's been NO real input on hams saving lives by "CW" lately.
"Lately" being in the last few decades. The best the pro-coders can come up with is some small-displacement ship going down somewhere in the UK territory on New Year's Eve...NOT doing the "CW" comms thing ON ham bands.

The US military has kept the CW setting on front panel controls for years...but NOT for radiotelegraphy purposes. That is for remoting the operation of transmitters, almost always by wireline control. Land forces learned many decades ago to locate transmitters well away from Hq troops.

Pro-coders will see such front panel control settings and immediately jump on their pro-code bandwagon shouting about
"the military using radiotelegraphy" when they don't know squat about real field use of land force radios or the peripheral equipment for same.

Army field radio was already dropping radiotelegraphy comms
DURING the active phase of the Korean War (i.e., prior to 1953).
Some of it was used in southeast Asia in the following decade.

Problem is, olde-tymers are still brainwashed by glorious propaganda (from the boys in Newington) about World War II and (conveniently) forget that war ended 61 years ago. They still have dreams of glory and honor using "CW" and get angry when they are awakened to the reality of today.

Sigh...well they've "denied" doing so, keep asking "where did I [they] write such words?" They didn't say so outright but the INTENT was plain as day at noontime.

These pro-coder olde-tymers just do NOT want that code test to ever disappear. If it did they would lose their major Bragging Right (to glory and honor of telegraphic modes).
